Committee to Reject Court Change, House Warned by Sumners

By Robert C. Albright.

Chairman Hatton W. Sumners of the House Judiciary Committee yesterday called for abandonment of the President's court plan as "unnecessary legislation" and virtually served notice his committee will have nothing to do with it.

A silent, retiring and even mysterious figure in the background of the Capitol court fight until yesterday, Representative Sumners spoke out for the first time in the House on the issue—spoke for an hour of what he called "plain horse sense."

But his speech marked the most significant development in the controversy since the Senate opened torrid debate one week ago. The upshot of the speech is that only by a petition, signed by 218 members of the House, can the court bill or the substitute "compromise" come before the body this session.

Has "No Apology."

Sumners said flatly his Judiciary Committee "has tried to keep this thing out of the House, and I have no apology to make for it." He said the issue is "tearing the country wide open," that the country is now at a crossroad that could lead to dictatorship, and warned that now is the time to "sit down and take a good think."

He spoke as two Democratic conservatives were presenting precisely the same message to a Senate ripped for the second week by party dissension on the court bill, but his homely appeal stole the thunder from their more violent onslaught.

Senator Royal S. Copeland, of New York, intensely anti-Administration in most of his views, had urged withdrawal of the court plan and admonished what he said "was once a united and invincible party, that disaster is not far ahead of us."

"Horse Sense" Urged.

"This is the time," Copeland had declared, "when the White House, with the aid of House leaders and such Senators as I have mentioned, should counsel together, not with the silly thought of reprisals, but of new plans, new unity, new enthusiasm, and new courage."

Sumners put it differently. He said he was appealing to "the officers of the Nation," appreciating "the danger of this hour," to gather round a conference table, and say:

"Now look here. Had we better not let this thing ride awhile, and let the boys sober down and come back here next session, since this is not the last session, and see what else is to be done? That seems to be horse sense."

On the other side of the Capitol, Senator Josiah W. Bailey, of North Carolina, conservative Baptist, had touched on the "dictatorship" theme.

"I do not accuse the President of seeking to be a dictator," Bailey had said. "But I do not hesitate to say that if this legislation shall be adopted the road to dictatorship for him or some other will be perfectly clear. I do not hesitate to say that should we adopt this policy there are those of us who might argue that it would be better to make him a dictator in order to head off another."

Sumners in the House struck the same chord of warning. He said free governments are disappearing, and America must decide whether it is going "to preserve Anglo-Saxon institutions in this country or join other nations of the earth under a dictator."

"Deceived by Egotism."

"We think these things can not come to us," said Sumners. "We are deceived by a perfectly ridiculous egotism. Only the greatest people who ever trod the earth can save this country from a dictator."

And while the Senate got tangled up in its extraordinary rules in a finally successful effort to recess, Sumners brought the House to its feet with applause and cheering with a fighting assertion.

If an attempt, he said, is made to force the Senate substitute bill into the House "when we are trying to preserve the solidarity of the Nation, if they bring that bill into this House for consideration, I do not believe they will have hide

General Succeeds Bolivian President

La Paz, Boliva, July 13 (AP).—President David Toro resigned tonight and Col. German Busch, chief of the army general staff, immediately assumed the presidency. An official announcement said calm prevailed throughout the nation.

Toro issued a statement saying he had resigned to give the army a free hand in rendering an expression of confidence in his regime or choosing another leader.

The ascendancy of Busch to provisional presidency gave Bolivia one of the world's youngest chief executives. He is only 33, but a veteran of the Chaco war with Paraguay in which he rose from a lieutenancy to the rank of lieutenant-colonel.

Europe Today

No. 19 in a series.

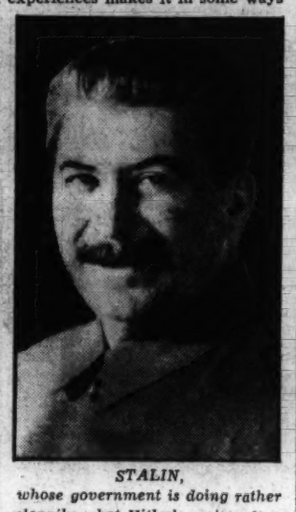
SIX WEEKS in Europe, no matter how many capitals are visited, nor celebrities interviewed, does not of itself suffice to give perspective on the scene in that Continent of change and ferment. On the contrary, the whirl of impressions and experiences makes it in some ways more difficult to distinguish the wood from the trees.

But conclusions begin to shape themselves during six restful days on the great ocean which separates the New World from the Old. They are confirmed by return to the American scene, the problems of which are to some extent clarified by comparison with those of Europe.

For the "primary interests" over there have greatly changed since the days when our republic first cut loose from them. Interest in European affairs is no longer as remote, our isolation from them is no longer as easily made effective, as was the case in the world our fathers knew.

It is to Germany that one's thoughts continuously return in the effort to make an assessment of what is really happening in Europe. That great country is the fulcrum of which the future of the Continent turns. Whatever the individual opinion regarding the Nazi regime there can be no doubt as to its power and influence.



STALIN, whose government is doing rather sloppily what Hitler's regime does very systematically.

Germany is smaller, poorer, and economically weaker than before the war. But her shadow extends over Moscow and Madrid. Her next move is the subject of speculation from Britain to the Balkans. There can be no political discussion, anywhere in Europe, which does not soon or late come around to Hitler—and remain there.

President's Son Agrees to Make Taxes Public

By the Associated Press.

President Roosevelt's eldest son, James, agreed yesterday to disclose his income tax returns in response to a Republican demand.

The lanky younger Roosevelt, who is one of his father's secretaries, appeared unexpectedly before the Senate-House tax committee when it renewed its study of personal holding companies alleged to be used as tax-avoidance devices.

Yesterday's testimony put into the record the names of William Randolph Hearst, publisher; President William S. Paley, of the Columbia Broadcasting System; C. F. Kettering, vice president of General Motors, and Jacob Ruppert, New York brewer and baseball magnate.

James Roosevelt, speaking in firm, quick syllables, told the committee he wished to deny that he had ever been connected with a foreign personal holding company.

Previously, Representative Fish (Republican), New York, had urged the committee to study Roosevelt's tax returns to ascertain whether he was associated with a Bahamas Islands company. Fish said a Mr. Darby, of New York City, had told him he had photostatic copies of papers connecting the President's son with such a company.

Memorial Site Compromise Is Denounced

Jefferson Group's Promise to Save Trees Fails to Win Backing.

The fight on Capitol Hill to prevent erection of the proposed Thomas Jefferson Memorial at the Tidal Basin will go on, notwithstanding the memorial commission's promise yesterday not to touch a cherry tree or alter the basin.

This was the challenge flung last night by Representative Allen T. Treadway (Republican), of Massachusetts, at the announcement of a compromise plan to build at the West Potomac Park basin site without disturbing the surrounding landscaping or the artificial lake itself.

At the same time, Treadway, whose bill prohibiting use of the site is expected to be reported to the House this week, voiced doubt that the proposed modification was an engineering possibility. Equally dubious were Federal officials charged with the responsibility of executing the project.

Announced by Chairman John J. Boylan, the revised scheme was decided upon yesterday at an unannounced meeting of the Thomas Jefferson Memorial Commission.

While Representative Boylan (Democrat), of New York, declined to divulge where the monument will be built, with relation to the Tidal Basin, it was learned that the new site would be south and west of the old location. The huge memorial, of greater bulk than the

Battle Moves Close to Gate Of Peiping

By the Associated Press.

Peiping (Wednesday), July 14.—Heavy skirmishing broke out early today outside Yung-Ting-Men, south gate of Peiping on the road to Nanyuan, in a renewal of Sino-Japanese conflict.

A steady trench mortar fire was punctuated by brisk machine-gun and rifle shots in an exchange which began at 1 a. m. (12 noon, E. S. T. Tuesday) and ended a half-hour later.

The exact nature of the skirmish was not known in the city, as the gates were locked.

Earlier grave fighting appeared under way as the thunder of heavy cannonading carried into Peiping from the southwest, where lie the Nanyuan Airdrome and Chinese barracks.

The conflict followed an engagement in which Gen. Sung Chehyuan's Twenty-ninth Chinese Route Army, Chinese reports said, forced a heavily supported detachment of Japanese troops to retreat toward their Fengtai base after being driven back on Peiping's southern wall in hand-to-hand fighting.

Charge Japanese Attack.

Tientsin reports said the Japanese attacked Chinese defenders of the four Eastern and Southern gates of this ancient capital and, though the defenders held firm, were able to cut off two Chinese brigades at the Nanyuan barracks from other units of the Twenty-ninth Route Army.

Chinese troops succeeded in removing sections of railway track skirting the southern and eastern walls of Peiping to prevent the approach of Japanese armored trains.

Chinese reports charged the Japanese bombed the barracks and airdrome in the Nanyuan district, which is the nerve center of the Twenty-ninth Route Army.

Japanese military leaders, however, denied the bombing and said their planes might have dropped leaflets and been fired upon by Chinese troops.

The Japanese North China command issued a communique in Tientsin explaining today's clashes near Peiping occurred after Chinese machine-gunned Japanese troops who were passing a village south of here.

The communique said three Japanese soldiers were killed and their comrades returned the fire, repulsing the attack.

Reports from usually reliable Chinese sources said 1,600 Japanese troops rumbled to the Japanese base at Fengtai, southwest of here, today by truck from Kupeikou, 62 miles northeast of Peiping.

"In Tokyo's Pocket."

The same sources said further Japanese troops have converted Miyun and Hunaijo, two East Hopei towns 50 miles northeast of here, into military camps.

The East Hopei militia of Chinese Gen. Yin Ju-keng from these towns arrived today in Tungchow, 20 miles east of Peiping.

With the strategic rail junction of Fengtai now the Japanese army's main base in the Peiping area, and with 10,000 Japanese troops believed to be in Tientsin, with more en route, Chinese observers said they felt Peiping was so well surrounded that "the ancient Chinese capital is in Tokyo's pocket."

There were several optimistic notes, however, that the conflict, which began last Wednesday when Japanese on secret night maneuvers near the Marco Polo Bridge west of here clashed with Chinese, could be settled. Each side accused the other of starting the action.

Soviet Polar Fliers Over U. S., To Extend Hop to San Diego; New Nonstop Record Nears

Believed Near Portland; 'Everything All Right,' Messages Say.

By the Associated Press.

San Francisco, July 13.—Russia's daring transpolar fliers, nearing the world's non-stop distance record as they soared over the Pacific Northwest, indicated tonight they would try to shatter the mark by flying on to San Diego, nearly 6,500 miles from their Moscow takeoff.

A short time after they had inquired of morning weather conditions at Los Angeles and San Diego, they sent a message translated here as indicating they would pass Oakland and Los Angeles and, if possible, continue to San Diego.

The message was picked up by Mackay Radio and relayed for translation to Army headquarters here at 8 p. m. (11 p. m., Eastern standard time). About 52 hours after the three aviators left Moscow to follow a transpolar route blazed three weeks ago by a Soviet trio who landed at Vancouver, Wash. It did not give a position, but the plane was believed to be over Oregon.

Frenchmen Hold Mark.

The world's distance record of 5,637 miles is held by the Frenchmen Rossi and Codas, who fled from New York to Syria. The Russians would better that mark shortly after crossing from Oregon into California.

Messages indicating a San Diego destination followed reports translated by Seattle Army authorities as saying the flight would end at Oakland, approximately 6,000 miles from Moscow.

Shortly before the message setting the San Diego goal was received, the previous one had been translated as saying:

"We are flying on our course 4,000 meters. We ask you to call National Aeronautic Association to take over instruments as we expect land at Oakland tomorrow morning."

The message, unsigned, did not give a position.

It was learned here that Soviet Consul Gregory I. Gokhman chartered a United Airlines plane and asked if the ship could land in Mexico if it became necessary. He was advised affirmatively.

The consul's office declined any information concerning chartering the plane, but aviation authorities expressed belief there might be sufficient gasoline in the Russian plane to carry it as far as Los Angeles, or to Mexico, the border of which is about 140 miles farther South.

Ask San Diego Weather.

No position report had been received from the fliers for several hours.

Half an hour after the Oakland landing message, the Department of Commerce airways radio at Portland picked up a code inquiry for weather conditions at San Diego, nearly 500 miles south of here.

Listeners were unable to explain the message and preparations went ahead to welcome the airmen at Oakland, believed to have been their destination when they set out from Moscow at 7:22 p. m. (Eastern Standard Time) Sunday.

Weather was moderating ahead of the fliers, who crossed the North Pole region yesterday in a snowstorm. From Seattle to Roseburg, Oreg., skies were overcast and there were showers, and from Roseburg south to Oakland flying conditions were good, the United Airlines Weather Bureau advised.

Earlier in the afternoon they had radioed: "Advise where to go; coast or east?"

They were told to circle eastward out of the zone of local storms. An hour and 20 minutes later the plane messaged "Everything is all right," but added cryptically, "I don't receive you."

The big red-winged monoplane, driven by a single 1,000-horsepower engine, left Moscow at 7:22 p. m. Sunday (Eastern standard time). It carried Pilot Mikhail Gromoff, Copilot Andrei Yumosheff and Navigator Sergi Danilin, following a course blazed last month by another trio of Soviet airmen, who came down at Vancouver, Wash.

The purpose of the flight, Gromoff said, was "to confirm as much the possibility of regular communications intercontinentally by way of the Pole." The Russions hoped, too, to break the nonstop record of 5,637 miles, held by the Frechmen Rossi and Codas. The Moscow-San Fran-

Rain brought temporary relief to Washington early last night at the end of the seventh day of a heat wave that the Weather Bureau says may outlast the eight-day heat wave of two years ago.

One death and four prostrations were laid to the weather yesterday in the District.

The Weather Bureau last night promised such momentary relief as gentle southeast winds and thundershowers may bring, but predicted there would be little change in temperature.

The thundershower broke shortly after 6 o'clock and sent the thermometer hurtling down 13 degrees in an hour from the 86-degree mark noted at 5 p. m. At 6:30 the mercury had struggled back 2 degrees to 75, but weather forecasters did not change their minds about the return of high temperature today.

Mary Katherine Warren, 37, colored, of Scotland, Md., died late Monday night after she collapsed while working in Chevy Chase, Md.

Four prostrations brought the total to 36 for the seven-day period here. Latest prostrations were:

Howard Truitt, 66, 3030 Hanover street, Baltimore; Gallinger Hospital.

Peak temperature was reached at 3:30 p. m., when the Weather Bureau thermometer registered 90, 1 degree short of the preceding day's high. Until rain cooled the mercury the low was 75, noted at 6 a. m. yester-

Pocahontas Story Is Sold for $290

London, July 13 (AP).—The love story of Pocahontas and John Rolfe, of Virginia, brought $290 today in a rare book auction.

Details of the life of the Indian princess, who according to legend saved Capt. John Smith from the ax, were included in one of the rarest volumes of Americana sold at Sotheby's salesrooms.

The book was Hamor's "True Discourse," published in 1615, which was a part of the Earl of Lonsdale's library put up for sale.

Capt. Smith was himself among the authors whose works were knocked down for a total of $31,515 in two days of sales. His "Description of New England," published in 1616, was sold along with other rare American items. They included Shrigley's "True Relations of Virginia and Maryland," 1669, and Thomas Packell's one leaf printed letter, "Pennsylvania," 1683.

Squall Drives Lexington Planes Back From Futile Earhart Hunt

Fliers in 60 Ships Scan 21,000 Square Miles of Pacific Without a Trace of Aviatrix and Navigator Noonan, Lost 11 Days.

By the Associated Press.

Honolulu, July 13.—Driven to refuge by a sudden tropical storm, planes searching the lonely South Pacific Ocean for Amelia Earhart and Fred J. Noonan, lost 11 days off tiny Howland Island, returned to the giant airplane carrier U. S. S. Lexington late today after a futile morning foray in their "last chance" hunt.

Twenty of the Lexington's 60 warplans had taken off from the ship to continue the search this afternoon when the storm broke. Squalls made visibility extremely poor and the 20 planes were recalled to the carrier by radio. The other aircraft were held aboard the ship as officers canceled the second mass flight of the day.

The searching planes returned to the Lexington at 4 p. m., Eastern Standard Time, after scanning 21,000 square miles of the area where it was believed the fliers were forced down on their flight July 2 from Lae, New Guinea. They were refueled and ready to take off again when the storm halted them.

From the broad flight deck of the aircraft carrier the morning flight of planes rocketed and spread spokewise, in the greatest search the Navy had attempted.

The pilots were under orders to sweep the seas southward of the great carrier. They took off when the Lexington was 120 miles northwest of Howland and sped over the horizon just as the sun came in view.

The 60 planes took up assigned positions two miles apart, in two divisions, one on each side of the mother ship. Each pilot was accompanied by an observer.

The fliers sat down to a hasty breakfast and then moved up to the Lexington's plane deck. Early preparations were carried out in tropical darkness, cut by the powerful lights at the sides of the huge flight deck.

A thousand members of the crew cheered the Navy fliers as they took their positions in their planes. There were cries of "bring back Amelia and Fred!" Several searchers were personal friends of the fliers.

For days the search was made by sea and air, first by the cutter Itasca, then by a British freighter and the minesweeper Swan; finally by the battleship Colorado which catapulted three planes into the air repeatedly to search tiny islands in the area, and of the intervening sea.

The 60 planes from the Lexington's deck were being flown under

House Upsets Veto on Farm Interest Slash

The House yesterday, by a vote of 260 to 98, overrode the President's veto of the bill which continued low interest rates on Federal Land Bank Farm loans and slashed interest rates on farm loans made by Land Bank Commissioners.

The President, in his veto message Monday, had asserted the bill's enactment would mean a $52,900,000 "gift" from the Treasury to individual borrowers on the first type of loan and would reduce the annual income of the Farm Mortgage Corporation by about $8,350,000 on the second type.

Early in yesterday's session the chairman of the House Agriculture Committee, Representative Marvin Jones, of Texas, announced to the House the committee recommended overriding the President's veto.

He said a 4 per cent interest rate was the maximum farmers should be required to pay on Government farm loans, and citing low rates on emergency loans to farmers on relief rolls, asserted:

"Let's not put a premium on sluggishness and a penalty on thrift. . . . It would be exceedingly difficult at this time to work out and obtain action on a compromise with the White House and the Farm Credit Administration."

Majority House Floor Leader Sam Rayburn, of Texas, took the floor in a vain effort to stop the tide of sentiment against the veto, saying:

"This measure would cost the

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Bar Harbor, Me., July 13.—Nancy Hoyt Curtis, writer and one-time Washington debutante, was back in her home near here tonight and a 25-year-old taxi driver was "voluntarily" spending the night in jail after immigration authorities had halted the coupe at the Canadian border.

The immigration officials at Calais, Me., took action when Mrs. Curtis' mother, Mrs. Henry M. Hoyt, heard the elopement rumors which set this fashionable resort community into a day-long turmoil. Mrs. Hoyt was reported to have telephoned a warning to the authorities.

Both Mrs. Hoyt and local police were on hand when the couple rolled back home from their sentimental journey shortly before midnight. Mrs. Hoyt took her daughter home. Police took the young taxi driver, James Baker, to jail, where they said he would remain for the night.

Excitement began here after the pair had applied to the town clerk for Baker's birth certificate and then disappeared. Friends said Mrs. Curtis wanted to have the ceremony performed in St. Stevens, Canada, but that the prospective bridegrom preferred Calais.

A pair of rare clouded leopards, arriving in traveling cases at the St. Louis Zoo, refused to enter more spacious quarters provided for their permanent abode and paid no attention when attendants choked on ammonia fumes which were directed at the leopards to force them to move. A heavy stream of water, however, turned the trick a few moments later when someone happened to think of it.

Secession threats rumbled on Nantucket Island as fear of a food and milk shortage grew among the 15,000 summer visitors and 3,500 natives—an outgrowth of a strike of steamship company employes which has disrupted communication with the mainland. Marshall Gardiner, a photographer, said a telegram would be sent to President Roosevelt informing him that if he does not intervene and urge immediate settlement of the strike, the island will secede and set itself up an "an independent protectorate." It was expected a Coast Guard cutter would be assigned to carry mail to the island.

Thumb-sucking causes retarded growth, unsound sleep, loss of appetite, inferiority complex and crooked teeth, Dr. Earl Swinehart, of Baltimore, told the American Dental Association at Atlantic City. He said his findings were based on a five-year study of 38 boys and girls who constituted what he described as a cross-section of "millions of American children" who habitually suck their thumbs. They like to do this, he said, because it has a soothing effect "not unlike a chemical sedative." Deceit, resentment and inferiority complexes develop in such children, he added, because they are "continually harassed by scolding, shaming and punishment."

The lightning bolts shattered the old proverb in Tiffin, Ohio, where, strangely enough, they struck the home of the local weather observer. First, part of the roof was wrecked and, a little later, a radio set was demolished and the observer and his wife were stunned.

Study Ordered By Roosevelt In Housing Lag

U. S. Needs 750,000 Home Units, He Says; Blames Mounting Costs.

By Franklyn Waltman.

President Roosevelt yesterday indicated he was gravely concerned over the lag which has occurred in housing construction throughout the Nation.

Mr. Roosevelt named a special committee of Government experts to make for him a study of the situation and the feasibility of proposed corrective measures, including the extension of the limited dividend housing corporation idea.

Not only is Mr. Roosevelt concerned over recent recessions in the volume of housing contracts, due, for the most part, he said, to increasing costs, but he also believes the time has arrived for the Administration to initiate steps for relief of renters.

So far the President's activities in this matter have not gone beyond the preliminary stage of discussion and exploration. Bue he has found that increased prices for building material and labor are at the heart of the problem, as an increase of an amount as small as $400 or $500 in the cost of a house has had a measurable effect in discouraging purchases and construction.

Talks With Lubin Group.

Mr. Roosevelt discussed these topics at some length at his semi-weekly press conference yesterday immediately after a conference of two hours with members of the Lubin committee, sometimes referred to as the "human budget" committee.

It is this committee that has been making studies for the President of the condition of what he has termed the underprivileged one-third of the population and of ways for increasing the purchasing power of that group—a subject on which the President proposes to make a fireside chat later on.

Those attending yesterday's conference with the President included Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau, Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins, Chairman Marriner S. Eccles, of the board of governors of the Federal reserve system; FHA Administrator Stewart MacDonald, his special assistant, Matt Daiger; Chairman John H. Fahey, of the HOLC; Relief Administrator Harry Hopkins, Acting Director of the Budget Daniel Bell, Commissioner of Labor Statistics Isador Lubin and Charles E. Merriam, of the Natural Resources Committee.

Morgenthau, Eccles, Fahey, McDonald and Lubin were designated as a special committee to prepare a study on the housing problem.

750,000 Units Behind.

In discussing his conference, the President said that in 1926 there were constructed in this country 926,000 family units and that as a result of the construction programs prior to the depression the country was about 1,000,000 family units over-built when the depression started. He said this was especially true of apartments in the large cities, many of which were vacant.

During the first two or three years of the depression the country, however, absorbed its surplus housing facilities, and housing construction subsequently lagged. The result is that the country now is approximately 750,000 family units behind its needs. For instance, he pointed out that 500,000 family units were needed last year, but that only about 300,000 were built.

Building operations in the housing field showed steady improvement until March, the President explained. There then occurred a falling-off in housing construction, due in large part to increased costs. He recalled that he cautioned against price rises which were taking place at that time.

The average, typical American home costs about $5,000, he said. People were willing to pay that amount for a home, but they lost interest in home ownership when the price went up to $5,400 or $5,500.

Labor, Mark-Ups Blamed.

The increased cost of houses, he said, was due to increased cost of building material, and of labor, and to some extent to the marking-up of prices by dealers. Since March, the President continued, some price-correction has taken place, with costs slightly down. If this price correction continues, he said, a revival of demand for houses can be expected.

Mr. Roosevelt said the public generally had established as a criterion of the amount that should be spent for a home a figure equal to three times annual income. He pointed out that even though there have been price increases this year, the family head today could buy a much better home for the same price than ten years ago. He also pointed out that due to the Federal Government's efforts home financing was easier and cheaper than in the pre-depression period.

Another aspect of the problem, he explained, was that, exclusive of agricultural workers, approximately 50 per cent of the Nation's wage-earners rented their homes. The Administration, he said, has done nothing to bring down rentals. The problem now has become a serious one, he added, since in some industrial communities where recovery has attracted an influx of population, wage-earners are spending as much as 50 per cent of their income for rent. He recalled the old American rule that 20 per cent of income was regarded as about the correct amount for rent, while in Europe one-seventh or 15 per cent was considered the prudent expenditure.

Rent Problem Studied.

Americans on the whole, he said, were paying too much for rent. Thus he had designated a special group, he went on, to make a study of the entire problem and to give especial attention to an extension of the limited dividend housing corporation plan.

The President believed there were large numbers of persons of small incomes who would place their savings in such institutions. He pointed out formerly savings accounts paid 4 per cent interest, but that today the rate generally has fallen to 2 per cent.

He said he believed that limited dividend corporations paying 3¼ per cent would prove more attractive to savers than the Treasury's "baby" bonds which pay an average of 2¼ per cent over a ten-year period. Under such an arrangement, he said, saving would be encouraged and at the same time it would be possible to build more homes.

450 Independents Urge Walkout to Protest Insurance Bill.

Threats of a general taxicab strike—launched by a group of independent drivers in opposition to House passage of the compulsory liability insurance bill Monday—hinged last night on a scheduled mass meeting in Typographical Temple, 425 G street northwest.

Spurred by oratory at an earlier meeting, approximately 450 striking drivers formed "flying squadrons" to cruise city streets and enlist support of cabmen from Washington's major taxi associations.

Although city officials adopted a "hands-off" policy in the walkout movement, it was unofficially predicted the threatened strike "wouldn't amount to much."

Members of the Public Utilities Commission, maintaining an attitude of "watchful waiting," said no action would be taken until it was definitely determined how far the strike would progress.

At the same time, a sharp increase in local taxi rates was forecast and when the compulsory insurance bill becomes law. Independent drivers estimated yesterday they will be forced to pay $1 a day in addition to regular operating expenses should they be required to carry liability coverage.

Representative Schulte (Democrat), Indiana, already has predicted existing zone rates would be boosted by at least 10 cents if the bill is enacted.

Quite persuasion, rather than violence, was the keynote of last night's efforts to bring about a city-wide walkout. The "flying squadrons" toured the city's cab stands, talking and gently arguing with nonstriking drivers. It was estimated "more than 1,000" cabmen would attend the scheduled mass meeting.

Spokesmen for the city's major cab concerns — Diamond, Bell, Premier and others — insisted the proposed strike would not affect them. Hary C. Wechsler, cashier of the Bell Cab Co., attributed the strike call to "agitators." The important concerns, he added, favor a cash bond, deposited with the Public Utilities Commission, to cover liability suits.

At a meeting yesterday afternoon —the second within 12 hours— Morris Hollod, secretary of the Industrial Brotherhood of Taxicab Drivers, a C. I. O. unit, called for a campaign to "tie up the whole city."

"We want every cab on strike," Hollod told the disgruntled drivers. "The job of seeing this is done is your job."

Scottsboro Case Witness Repeats Story of Assault

Decatur, Ala., July 13 (AP).—Victoria Price told a jury in the first of the new "Scottsboro" trials today half a dozen colored men assaulted her aboard a freight train six years ago.

She testified that Clarence Norris was one of 12 who "jumped into the gondola" in which she and Ruby Bates were riding and that several white men in the car were ordered to "unload."

Norris is one of nine held in the case, long in litigation in State and Federal courts.

Mrs. Price and Ruby Bates said they were returning to their homes in Huntsville, Ala., after an unsuccessful search for work in Chattanooga, Tenn., at the time of the attack.

Mrs. Price, a textile mill worker, added that one of the alleged attackers held a knife at her throat and another pinioned her limbs. Two or three, she said, were armed with pistols, and several others with knives.

Thinks Plea for Aid Will Fail Unless District Pays for Funds.

The District government probably will have to pay interest if Congress authorizes it to obtain emergency loans from the Federal Treasury, it developed yesterday.

Representative Kennedy (Democrat), Maryland, who introduced a joint resolution Monday to enable the District to forestall a fiscal crisis, said he will offer an amendment today to assess the District with 2 per cent interest.

Kennedy said that he believed that the borrowing resolution would never pass the House unless the District were made to pay interest.

The House District Committee will consider the resolution today. Among other measures on the calendar is the Norton bill to change the procedure for adoption.

The Washington Real Estate Board yesterday mailed to every member of Congress a letter objecting to any increase in the local real estate tax as voted by the House and the Senate District Committee.

"Real estate owners in the District now produce approximately 60 per cent of the total tax bill for the said District," the letter stated, "and any increase would not only be most unjust and unfair but would place further hardship upon the home owners and real estate owners of this community."

The letter was signed by Morton J. Luchs, vice president of the board.

William J. Boothe, D. C. Banker, Dies

Mr. Boothe was born in Alexandria and educated at Potomac Academy there. He worked for many years with the Leadbeater Drug Co., and then became a partner in the Washington banking firm of Crane, Parris & Co., retiring about ten years ago.

Funeral services will be held at 11 a. m. tomorrow at his home. Burial will be private.

Liquor Permits Suspended.

The Federal Alcohol Administration suspended yesterday permits to Charleston (S. C.) liquor wholesalers for allegedly aiding the sale of liquor in the dry States of Georgia and North Carolina. Sixty-day suspensions were meted out to Vincent Chicco and A. F. Dosher & Sons.

U. S. Receives British Message On China Crisis

Two Nations May Discuss Conflict; Hull Issues Warning to Wang.

The United States yesterday proceeded in its policy of separate and independent action in regard to the new crisis in Sino-Japanese relations, as Secretary Hull conveyed to the Chinese Ambassador, Dr. C. T. Wang, the same expression he had made to the Japanese envoy, Hirosi Saito, on Monday, that "an armed conflict between Japan and China would be a great blow to the cause of peace and world progress."

Meanwhile, the Secretary announced receipt by this Government of a communication from Great Britain which was generally understood to contain a suggestion the powers consult together in regard to the Far East conflict. Secretary Hull declined to reveal the nature of the British note, but Foreign Minister Anthony Eden, at London, had said his government might propose consultations with this country.

Secretary Hull indicated he felt there was no occasion for any exchange of information aside from that which he had announced Monday in telling of his conversations with the Japanese Ambassador and the Counselor of the Chinese Embassy, Zaung Teh Ing.

Asked whether there had been any discussion of the nine-power treaty relating to Chinese territorial sovereignty and the "open door" in China, the Secretary declined to go into details but said there is some degree of flexibility in this Government's general policies, particularly where they correspond to the policies of others. He emphasized, however, it was the policy of the United States to deal separately and independently with the situation.

Dr. Wang, following his conversation with Secretary Hull, told reporters the situation was "tense" in the Far East.

U. S. Group to Aid Monument Rites

The United States will be represented at the dedication of the American Battle Monuments in France by the commission which supervised construction, and by a special delegation of distinguished Americans.

Gen. John J. Pershing, chairman of the American Battle Monuments Commission; Brig. Gen. J. B. P. Clayton Hill, and Lieut. Col. X. H. Price, commission secretary, are already in Paris. Other members sailing today on the Manhattan include Col. Robert G. Woodside, vice chairman; Col. D. John Markey, and Mrs. Henry Fenimore Baker. Former Senator David A. Reed is the only commission member who will be unable to attend the ceremonies which will take place in Europe from August 1 to August 15.

The delegation representing the United State is headed by William C. Bullitt, American Ambassador to France; Josephus Daniels, Ambassador to Mexico; Representatives Lister Hill, of Alabama; Charles A. Eaton, of New Jersey and J. Walter Lambeth, of North Carolina; Brig. Gen. Benedict Crowell, Harry W. Colmery, national commander of the American Legion; Brig. Gen. Bernard W. Kearney, commander in chief, Veterans of Foreign Wars; C. A. Ragor, deputy chief of staff, Disabled American Veterans, and Mrs. Howard C. Boone, national president, American War Mothers, and the three chaplains, the Rev. William P. O'Connor, the Rev. Perry Smith and Rabbi Michael Aaronshohn.

FEDERAL REINFORCEMENTS grew nearer for Georgia yesterday, in that State's long war to maintain inviolate its territory against liquor invasions.

The House Judiciary Committee approved unanimously a bill which would add a new law to the Federal statutes, a law guaranteeing Federal protection to dry States. The bill is the work of Representative Malcolm C. Tarver, of Georgia. Judge Tarver offered the bill immediately following Georgia's June 8 decision at the polls to remain dry.

Provisions of the twenty-first amendment to the Constitution, which contains the guarantee, have never been written into law, Tarver said. Fine or imprisonment, or both, is provided in the bill for manufacture, sale or transportation of liquor destined for use in dry territory.

INITIATION of Federal experiment toward solution of the tenancy program was closer to actuality today. The House voted approval of a conference report on a bill authorizing 40-year loans at 3 per cent interest to tenants, who would be forbidden to sell or mortgage such farms for five years. Appropriation of $10,000,000 this year, $25,000,000 next year and $50,000,000 the following year is authorized. There is some fear, however, the President will veto the bill because it permits tenants to acquire title to farms more readily than the Administration desires.

BECAUSE OF OPPOSITION by Senator Ellender, of Louisiana, the Senate Postoffice Committee submitted an adverse report on the nomination of C. I. Davis to be postmaster at Leesville, La. . . . Representative Kitchens, of Arkansas, announced he has protested to the Social Security Board against removal of the board's field office from El Dorado, Ark. . . . Representative Dirksen, of Illinois, made public a letter to Secretary Morgenthau asking 11 question he wants the Secretary to answer on the American-Chinese gold-silver agreement . . . Representative Kleberg, whose giant Texas farms yield him a salary as officer, proposed in a bill that members of Congress be permitted to share in the Government's agricultural program, but Kleberg himself would not benefit.

REPRESENTATIVE TARVER'S activities during the day embraced the C. I. O. He asked the Social Security Board to investigate affidavits filed with him by J. F. Fowler, president of E-Z Mills at Cartersville, Ga., asserting a C. I. O. field representative visiting workers' homes had said she received their names and addresses from the board. Tarver wants to know if the board knew of this and if it sanctions the practice—also if the board knows whether the incident occurred.

SOMETIMES PLAYFUL Senator Josiah W. Bailey, of North Carolina, called a Roman's holiday in the Senate yesterday at the expense of a colleague's dramatics on the court issue.

Bailey dubbed Senator M. M. Logan, of Kentucky, "our Marc Antony." He recalled Logan's words: "When Caesar discovered that Brutus, his own friend, had turned against him, his great heart broke."

Bailey cast Senator Burton K. Wheeler, of Montana, as "Cassius" and Senator Joseph C. O'Mahoney, of Wyoming, as "Brutus" in the "tragedy."

"'Cassius' Wheeler and 'Brutus' O'Mahoney had broken the President's heart," Bailey went on.

"I was moved to tears, but I had some thoughts that relieved me. For that same afternoon I went to the ball game, and there was the President.

"At the very hour when 'Marc Antony' Logan was mourning in the market place, the President was going merrily o he ball game. He enjoyed it, and so did I."

FRANK E. GANNETT, president of the Gannett Newspapers, urged House members to support legislation calling for a national referendum before war can be declared.

"I think you will agree," he wrote all Representatives, "that unless the formulating of our foreign policies is kept in civilian hands, our country is always in danger of being swept by overenthusiastic militarists into a war overseas."

Gannett suggested that the Representatives sign a petition to bring before the House the referendum bill by Representative Ludlow (Democrat), Indiana.

ECNOMY-MINDED House members forced a 40-minute roll call on a $1,200-a-year janitorship.

Chairman Warren (Democrat), North Carolina, of the Accounts Committee, asked the janitorship for the House Education Committee. Asserting the job was "unneeded" and that its proposal was in conflict with President Roosevelt's "economy program," Representative Snell, of New York, Republican leader, forced a yea-and-nay vote. The janitorship was voted, 234 to 113.

Elks Hear Farley Support Court Bill

Denver, July 13 (AP).—Postmaster General Farley, honor guest today at the national convention of Elks, discussed the Supreme Court reorganization plan and labor strikes, but parried questions about a third term for President Roosevelt.

Of a Roosevelt third term, Mr. Farley said:

"I may have my own ideas about those things, but there is only one man who can answer that question and that man, of course, is President Roosevelt."

The Postmaster General said Senator Robinson, administration Senate leader, has said he has enough votes to pass the President's compromise court reorganization bill.

Longshoremen And C.I.O. Clash On 'Ultimatum'

A.F.L., Lewis Aides Confer on 'Open Warfare;' Last Steel Plant Reopens.

By the Associated Press.

New York, July 13.—Threats of raids and counterraids in the Nation's union labor camps today touched off the heralded "open warfare" between John L. Lewis' C. I. O. and the American Federation of Labor for control of 40,000 members of the International Longshoremen's Association.

As a prelude to the struggle leaders on both sides held conferences behind locked doors.

"We're not taking ultimatums from anybody."

The "ultimatum" was served on Ryan yesterday by Harry Bridges, leader of Pacific Coast longshoremen, the so-called "brains" of the 1934 West Coast maritime strike which paralyzed shipping for 77 days, cost an estimated $100,000,000 and collapsed only after "vigilantes" had organized to combat a general strike in San Francisco.

Bridges informed Ryan the C. I. O. was determined to invade the Nation's waterfronts and enroll both longshoremen and warehouse workers.

He warned Ryan that unless he abandoned the American Federation of Labor, with which the I. L. A. has been affiliated for 25 years, the C. I. O. would take Ryan's organization away from him.

Ryan retorted:

"I'm not interested in any statement that Australian Communist (Bridges) makes. To me he is like prickly heat."

Last Steel Plant Reopens.

East Chicago, Ind., July 13 (AP).—Gates swung wide today at Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co.'s "Harbor" plant, reopening without incident the last of the large steel mills closed by the 47-day strike on a seven-State front.

Cheerful workers, many with "dookies"—steelmen's language for the familiar newspaper-wrapped lunch—streamed past company and railroad police into the Indiana Harbor mill, which normally employs more than 6,000 persons. Plant officials said a virtually normal day force of 3,000 was on hand.

Controversy over who "won" the strike abated but little. The company, reasserting its position no agreement had been made with anyone, posted large signs at each gate. They read:

"Notice: We have not made any agreement or contract with any official, person or organization. This plant is open for work on the conditions which existed when work was stopped May 26, 1937."

Ford Union Man Testifies.

Detroit, July 13 (AP).—A former Ford Motor Co. employe who joined the United Automobile Workers Union testified today he was discharged without apparent reason May 24 after his daily wage had been increased from $6 to $7.60 during six months he worked at Ford's Dearborn plant.

Clarence E. Fleming, an automobile worker for 13 years, was the first witness as the National Labor Relations Board's inquiry here turned to charges the Ford company dismissed workers for union activity. In a formal complaint the board has charged the company with unfair labor practices.

Earlier the examiner had heard additional testimony concerning the beating of U. A. W. A. organizers at the gates of the Dearborn plant May 26, and had admitted to the record testimony that Charles Goodman, a Ford employe, had been convicted for simple larceny and speeding, for aiding a prisoner to escape and for frequenting a gambling house.

Sale of U. S. Planes To Madrid Charged

Berlin, July 13 (U.P.).—The German official (DNB) news agency tonight quoted a dispatch in the Karlsruhe newspaper "Fuehrer" saying that a French aviation company has purchased 20 American airplanes to sell to the Spanish loyalist government.

The dispatch said the government-subsidized Air France Co., bought the planes for the "Spanish bolshevists." The planes were said to be single-motored Bellancas with the most modern bombing equipment and capable of attaining a speed of 279 miles an hour.

The planes already have arrived at Valencia, the dispatch said.

"Very improbable," was the comment in State Department circles last night regarding the above dispatch.

Pointing out that shipment of any airplanes from this country must be preceded by getting of an export license specifically covering them, officials said that no licenses had been issued for such planes as were described in the dispatch. Consequently, to have reached Europe they would have had to be smuggled out of this country, a possibility described as "highly improbable."

Two Naval Reservists Killed in Plane Crash

San Pedro, Calif., July 13 (AP).—The United States Fleet radio reported that two Naval Reserve men died today when their plane crashed during Navy gunnery exercises off Santa Barbara Island.

The victims were Cadet Edwin Higgins, of Seattle, Wash., and Julian Stogner, of Hamlet, N. C. They were in a plane catapulted from the deck of the battleship Mississippi. Higgins was the pilot.

Britain Starts Inquiry In Mystery Ship Fire

London, July 13 (AP).—Admiralty officials today sought the cause of a mysterious fire which broke out on Great Britain's new $15,000,000 aircraft carrier Ark Royal last night in the Birkenhead shipyards. The blaze was extinguished before much damage had been done.

House Cheers 'Old Harry,' Votes Him Pension; Ways and Means Doorkeeper for 46 Years

Colored Man Wins Praise for Services Since Days of McKinley.

By Sidney Olson.

"Old Harry" sat in the gallery of the House of Representatives yesterday, his black face shining above his bright yellow satin tie, and tried to keep from crying.

Down in the well of the House 340 Representatives were standing, cheering for "Old Harry" and waving to him. Happily he waved back, and happily he shuffled out of the gallery and down to the worn chair by the door of the House Ways and Means Committee—a door he has guarded for 46 years.

The House yesterday voted Harry Parker a lifetime pension of $130 a month "for services rendered."

Those services rendered go back a long time. Old Harry, scratching his curly white poll, doesn't know just how old he is. But he was about 9 some 63 years ago when he left Mount Vernon estate—where he was reputedly the last child born—for a ride on a milkwagon to Washington.

He missed the ride back, so he started shining shoes in the corridors of the Capitol. Soon he was on the Government pay roll, and he's been there ever since. It was around 1889 that Representative William McKinley, an Ohio Republican who later became President, gave him a job with the Ways and Means Committee.

Down the years came Harry. The committee changed many times over—now Republicans at its head and now Democrats—but Harry stayed on. When Oscar Underwood, of Alabama, whose name went into the National consciousness during that 1924 Democratic convention—when his tariff bill passed during the Wilson Administration, he vented his joy by giving Old Harry his own big brown Stetson hat. Harry still has that hat, but he wears it only on state occasions.

In 1930 when the Democrats were coming back into power, a reporter asked Old Harry about his politics, reminding him neither side appeared to have much of a majority and that he'd better choose the right side. Harry smiled and said:

"I ain't no Republican and I ain't no Democrat. I'se jes' a servant of the people, that's all."

HARRY PARKER, veteran messenger, whose full pay retirement was voted yesterday by the House after 63 years' continuous service at the U. S. Capitol. He started work there as a shoe shine boy at the age of 12 and worked up to the staff of the House Ways and Means Committee.

Yesterday Representative Lindsay Warren (Democrat), of North Carolina, who suggested the pension for Harry, said:

"Now Harry is tired. The old man is weary. His feet hurt him.

"You have to come from my section to know what it means when an old colored man's feet hurt him.

"He came to me this morning, and said, 'Boss, if you gennelmen do this fo' me, what in the worl' am I goin' do when this job is taken from me?'

"I said, 'Harry, you just hang around here the rest of your life. You're just as much a part of the Capitol as the dome.'"

Then the members stood and cheered, and voted in the pension by a vote of 340-to-0. Chairman Robert L. Doughton, of North Carolina, of the Ways and Means Committee, praised Harry, and Representative Allen T. Treadway (Republican), of Massachusetts, lauded him as a "faithful—not servant—but friend" to all House members.

It is history that the Ways and Means Committee room is located on the corner of the intersecting corridors of the House floor simply because old Harry wanted to be where he could "see the people." He had been unhappy when the committee was on the street floor.

Harry sings tenor in his church, and he once admitted he sang so loud and hard if affected his heart. He is very religious and firm in his faith that the great men of the Ways and Means Committee who have died are even now "sitting around a big table up yonder, with their feets on the table, waitin' fo' me to come up and serve them."

He has but one deep secret. That is his recipe for the pineapple-orangeades he serves committee members during the hot-weather hearings. He may pass this secret on now, though.

HOLC Test Case Dismissed Because Of Wrong Number

A case before Police Court Judge Walter J. Casey, which might have challenged the validity of the set-up of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, was dismissed yesterday afternoon with a directed verdict of not guilty because of a variance in the charge.

Edmund C. Fletcher, a former assistant to the Attorney General in the Harding and Coolidge Administrations, had been charged with forcible entry and detainer, the Government maintaining he refused to vacate property at 3142 Military road. Government attorneys stated that he had purchased the property shortly before the HOLC foreclosed on it.

Fletcher's attorney later pointed out that he had never owned property at 3142 Military road, but had owned a house at 4132 Military road. After examining the facts, Judge Casey directed a not guilty verdict be returned.

Roosevelt-Lewis Ticket Proposed

Columbus, Ohio, July 13 (AP).—Representative Gus Kasch, of Akron, champion bill-introducer of the Ohio House, although none of his projects has ever become law, proposed a resolution late today urging President Roosevelt to accept nomination for a third term with John L. Lewis as his running-mate.

Kasch's resolution, which was not acted upon, specified that Roosevelt accept only on the provision that he resign January 1, 1942, in favor of his Vice President, Lewis, leader of the Committee for Industrial Organization.

New Artillery Shell Disappears in Britain

London, July 13 (AP).—Alarmed officials hunted today for a dangerous 5-inch shell of a secret experimental type that vanished from a government artillery range.

The public was warned last night on a nation-wide radio hookup that the missing explosive was highly dangerous with an extremely sensitive fuse.

It disappeared, officials said, after it failed to explode in test work and had been marked for demolition. When gunnery experts attempted to carry out the order, the shell was missing.

Rep. Merritt to Address New York Party Group

Representative Mathew J. Merritt, of New York, will be the guest speaker at the meeting of the New York State Democratic Club of Washington, Inc., at the Raleigh Hotel tomorrow at 8 p. m., according to an announcement made yesterday by Peter J. Connolly, club president.

Site's Acquisition To Speed Hospital

Construction on the new $1,000,000 Doctors' Hospital was expected to begin in October yesterday after Justice Joseph W. Cox authorized trustees of the historic Friends' Meeting House at 1811 I street northwest to sell the property to the doctors' corporation.

The meeting house site was the last to be acquired because there had been some doubt whether the trustees had the power to sell the structure.

The new hospital, plans for which have not yet been completed in detail, will provide space for 250 beds and for the most part will be designed to meet the needs of persons of moderate means.

Worker Is Killed By Electric Shock

A fire department rescue squad failed to revive him.

Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald said a certificate of accidental death would be withheld pending investigation. The building in which Loveridge was working is being converted into a garage.

Funeral services will be held at noon tomorrow at S. H. Hines', Fourteenth and Harvard streets northwest, with burial at Warrenton, Va. Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Ruth Loveridge, four daughters, Elizabeth, Elaine, Jean and Ann Loveridge, and his mother, Mrs. Lillian Loveridge, all of Washington.

Reds List Mdivani With 7 to Be Shot

Moscow, July 13 (AP).—Eight men have been sentenced to be shot for treason, terrorism and conspiracy in Russia's Georgian state, said a communique in the Tiflies Newspaper reaching here today.

One of the men was listed as "B. Mdivani." It was believed Bydy Mdivani was the person referred to, although he previously was reported executed, May 22.

Bydy Mdivani, identified by Soviet officials last January as a relative of the "marrying" Georgian princes, was arrested last January. (David Mdivani said in New York at that time he never heard of Bydy Mdivani.)

Flivver Pilot Starts 'Hobo' Flight to India

Blasdell, N. Y., July 13 (AP).—Merrill K. Riddick hopped off today on a 35,000-mile "hobo" flight to Bombay, India, in a flivver ship.

His ship weighs between 500 and 600 pounds, gets 25 miles to a gallon of gasoline and cruises between 60 and 70 miles an hour, he said.

He took off with only $200 and said he expected "to pick up enough money crossing the continent by giving people lifts to pay my expenses."

Jamboree Officer Thanks Red Cross For Aiding Scouts

The Army, Navy and the United States Public Health Service were not the only agencies which co-operated to make the Boy Scout Jamboree a safe and sane affair.

Dr. Smith talked with Commodore W. E. Longfellow of the Red Cross First Aid and Life Saving Service, his assistant at the Jamboree, and to Gordon Stone, director of instruction of first aid, who supervised the Red Cross first aid facilities.

"Much credit is due the Red Cross for the excellent safety record which was maintained," Dr. Smith said. He is connected with the Marine Hospital in New Orleans.

Admiral Vernou Goes to Canal Zone

Rear Admiral Walter Newhall Vernou, former aide to President Roosevelt, has been appointed commandant of the Fifteenth Naval District and the Naval Station, Balboa, Canal Zone, the Navy Department announced yesterday.

Admiral Vernou served as the President's aide from 1932 to 1934. He has since attended the Naval War College, Newport, R. I., and commanded Cruiser Division 3, Battle Force. Last year he was appointed commander of cruisers, Battle Force.

During the World War Admiral Vernou was in command of the destroyer Cassin and in 1918 was made district commander, U. S. Naval Forces at Brest, France. He was awarded the Distinguished Service Medal.

He is succeeding Rear Admiral Albert W. Marshall, who is now on duty in the office of the Chief of Naval Operations here.

Guild Will Present 'Smilin' Thru' Tonight

The Blackfriar's Guild presentation of "Smilin' Thru," postponed last night because of rain, has been scheduled for 8 o'clock tonight in the Sylvan Theater, near the Washington Monument.

A half-hour concert by the Washington Gas Light Co.'s Employes Band will precede the play, which is sponsored by Community Center Department and the Office of National Capital Parks.

Russian Fliers Over U.S.; Head For San Diego

cisco airline distance is about 6,000 miles.

Less than 24 hours out of Moscow, Gromoff and his men crossed the North Polar cap, rising over a cyclone area and riding through snow flurries. They then were four hours ahead of the schedule of the previous transpolar flight.

From the Pole they sped southward, generally along the 120th meridian. At 2 a. m. (E. S. T.) today, about seven hours after having crossed the Pole, Navigator Danilin messaged: "My position is Straights of Melville; everything all right." The plane then was about 1,000 miles this side of the polar cap.

Frequently through the night the fliers sent the reassuring message "Everything all right." At 4:21 a. m. (E. S. T.) they crossed Great Bear Lake, some 1,400 miles down the Canadian side from the Pole.

Fliers Can't Speak English.

Moscow, July 13 (AP).—When the Soviet transpolar fliers land, they probably will make known some of their wishes by handing out notes written in English.

None of the three speak English, but friends wrote out some sentences for them before they left so that they could get along if there was no translator on hand.

Pilot Mikhail Gromoff, when he made plans for a long-distance flight two years ago, selected Brazil instead of the United States for his destination, the newspaper Pravda said tonight. The Brazilian government refused to allow the Soviet plane permission to land in that country, the paper declared.

Union Chiefs Fight To Win Stevedores

Defiance of the John L. Lewis Committee for Industrial Organization by Joseph P. Ryan, head of the American Federation of Labor's International Longshoremen's Association last night opened the way for a C. I. O.-A. F. L. battle for control of the country's longshoremen.

Harry Bridges, head of the Pacific section of the I. L. A., acting for the C. I. O., delivered an ultimatum to Ryan, in New York, that unless he accepted affiliation terms of the C. I. O., that organization would organize all longshoremen under Bridges' section.

After Ryan refused the terms, Bridges was chosen as the C. I. O. representative on the Pacific and said he would open a drive to organize the longshoremen nationally under the C. I. O.

Another Is Jailed In Death of Girls

Los Angelis, July 13 (AP)—Haskell Wright, Inglewood recreation director, was taken into custody by Detective Lieut. Leroy J. Sanderson today after he had testified before the county grand jury concerning his expressed doubt that Albert Dyer, charged with the slaying of three little girls, is the man who killed and ravished them.

With Wright's detention, ordered but not explained by District Attorney Buron Fitts, the grand jury launched a new investigation of the triple slaying. Three affidavits were presented to the jury, purporting to show that Dyer was in Inglewood at the time Madeline and Melba Everett and Jeanette Stephens were strangled in the Baldwin Hills, on June 26.

Newfoundland Greets Transatlantic Plane

Montreal, July 13 (Canadian Press).—The Imperial Airways flying boat Caledonia landed today at Botwood, Newfoundland, on the second leg of its North Atlantic crossing.

A radio report received at St. Hubert Airport, 14 miles from Montreal, said the airplane reached its Newfoundland base at 3:29 p. m., Eastern standard time. Its next scheduled jump is to Foynes, Ireland.

Receives Letter.

Rockford, Ill., July 13 (AP).—Miss Beverly Hunter, daughter of State Representative Edward C. Hunter, received a letter today which she said Fred Noonan mailed at Bandoeng, Java, a few days before he and Amelia Earhart took off for Howland Island and disappeared.

Miss Hunter declined to divulge the contents of the letter, saying Noonan had so requested. She said, however, she would make the letter public if the search for the fliers fails. She met Noonan at Alameda, Calif., several years ago and has corresponded with him since, she said.

R. B. Swope Assails Nazi Censorship

Special Dispatch to The Post.

New York, July 13.—Declaring the German people no longer can speak freely regarding conditions in their country, Robert B. Swope, president of the Washington Rotary Club and president of the Southern Oxygen Co., returned here today with Mrs. Swope and their daughter Marcia aboard the Cunard White Star liner Aquitania, following a six-week tour through France, England, Switzerland and Germany. Swope was a delegate to the international Rotary convention at Nice.

"The censorship that has been clamped down in Germany makes it impossible for the tourist to obtain any information as to conditions in the Reich," Swope said.

Also arriving here aboard the Grace liner Santa Barbara was George T. Summerline, American Minister to Panama, en route to Washington for a brief stay.

Gov. Nice Praises Cardinal Gibbons

Ceremonies in honor of James Cardinal Gibbons planed for Sunday by the Knights of Columbus were informally opened here yesterday with arrival of a written tribute from Gov. Nice of Maryland.

Regretting he would be unable to attend the ceremony, Gov. Nice, in a letter to Walter I. Plant, State deputy, paid public tribute and personal respect "to the memory of one of Maryland's outstanding citizens and my personal friend."

Gov. Nice arranged for a wreath to be presented in his name at the ceremonies on Sunday. Fifty local and national Catholic organizations are to participate in the services and Dr. John R. Fitzpatrick, dean of Columbia Law School, will give the principal address.

Lewis' Aim Is Graft, Oregon Governor Says

Salem, Oreg., July 13 (AP).—Gov. Charles Martin in a statement charged today that the purpose of John L. Lewis' campaign to organize 200,000 State, county and municipal workers was "to collect $1 a month dues in a big graft."

The Governor indicated he would fight the proposed union as hard as he has opposed the American Federation of Labor's attempted organization of Oregon State employes.

Capital Lawyer Begins Term in Estate Fraud

Pittsburgh, July 13 (AP).—William Marrow Cameron Smith, a Washington, D. C., attorney convicted in the Jacob Baker estate mail fraud cases, will begin a term in the Federal penitentiary at Lewisburg, Pa., tomorrow, the U. S. Marshal's Office announced.

The Government charged Smith and others took thousands of dollars from residents throughout the States after convincing them they might share in the estate Government attorneys described as mythical. Smith will serve a year and a day.

German Army Called Threat To Peace Cause

Soon Will Be Strongest in World, Briton Tells U. Va. Institute.

By the Associated Press.

Charlottesville, Va., July 13.—Germany's army, which he said would soon be the strongest in the world, was declared the greatest danger to international peace in an address tonight by Sir Herbert Brown-Ames, former financial director of the League of Nations secretariat.

This does not necessarily mean war, however, he told the Institute of Public Affairs, because Hitler will not enter a major conflict without approval of the general military staff and "these professional soldiers of long experience will not consent to a risky adventure unless they are convinced of ultimate success."

Speaking on the same program, Dr. Helgo W. Culemann, former member of Amherst College faculty and now an author, scientist and lecturer, defended the Nazi program and Germany's right to rearm in "a healthy competitive spirit." He denounced the "badly disguised imperialistic desires of other European nations."

"Cannot Win."

Sir Herbert contended the Germany of today, even if rearmed to the maximum, has no better chance of winning a world war than it did in 1914.

"In 1914 Germany had a vast store of gold at Spandau with which to purchase food and raw materials from neutral nations," the Canadian diplomat pointed out. "She has very little gold today and with all her substitutions, she can not today produce enough food within her own borders to feed adequately her civilian population. Were she at war she could not import these necessities."

Sir Herbert predicted that any future world war will be a struggle between peoples, rather than a contest between contending armies, "in which no man, woman or child will be safe from danger."

What will it profit the people of Germany to read in their morning papers that on the previous night London and Paris were bombed, if on the same night Berlin, Frankfort or Hamburg suffered a similar fate?" he asked.

In the last World War, he said, the inhabitants of Germany never experienced the actual horrors of war. He said he could only wonder how long they would endure a war—"started by their own leaders for conquest"—if their own land was to be made a wilderness by air attacks.

League Is Defended.

Dr. Pitman P. Potter, professor of international organization in the Graduate Institute at Geneva, blamed Germany, Italy and Japan today for hindering "the whole conception of organized international peace and progress."

These three nations, moreover, he said to the institute, are responsible along with England, France and America, for the failure of the League of Nations.

Dr. Potter, describing himself as the league's apologist or defender, said the league has never been tested in the sense of its basic theory and principle. "It has failed as member states have failed to live up to their opportunities," he said. "Or rather it is not the League of Nations which failed, but the nations of the League."

For the League's inability to cope with the Ethiopian and Munchurian crises, Dr. Potter blamed France and Great Britain.

Frank Bane, executive director of the Social Security Board, in another speech said the American public must share with officials the responsibility for making social security a national reality.

Dr. S. L. Joshi, former Carnegie exchange professor from India to the United States, discussed before the same audience recent phases of Indo-British relations and told of difficulties encountered since the new Indian constitution went into effect April 1.

Walter H. C. Laves, director of the Midwest office of the League of Nations Association, outlined the international economic co-operation that has been made possible through the League of Nations.

Ground-Breaking Rites Start Boys Club Southeast Building

Frank R. Jelleff Presides as Ceremony Officially Opens Construction on New Unit; Prominent Persons Look On.

Ground was broken yesterday for the new Southeast Branch of the Boys Club of Washington, Seventeenth street and Massachusetts avenue southeast, in the presence of dozens of young potential patrons of the building.

Frank R. Jelleff presided and turned over the first spade of earth. Mrs. Eleanor Patterson, donor of the building, had been called out of town and was unable to attend.

In a brief address, Jelleff expressed appreciation of help by Mrs. Patterson, District Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen, the Community Chest, the Southeast Citizens Association and other agencies in making the building possible.

Commissioner Hazen also spoke, referring to the "patriotic job" the Boys Club is doing in developing the character of future citizens.

"I hope these clubs will spread over our city and ultimately include all the children," he concluded.

Among the onlookers were members of the board of trustees of the Boys Club and officers of the Council of Social Agencies, the Optimist Club, the Southeast Businessmen's Association, the Community Chest and the Board of Trade.

In an exclusive interview yesterday, Bobbie Joe Keller, 6, of 1341 South Carolina avenue southeast, told The Post he has every intention of joining the Boys Club when the building is completed.

"I seen the picture of it in the paper and it's O. K.," he said.

Hearing Today On Bill to Stop Hasty Adoption

Measure Provides Trial Period Before Papers Can Be Filed.

A hearing on the proposed bill to regulate adoption proceedings in the District will be held at 10 a. m. today in the old House Office Building, with numerous social and welfare workers of Washington as witnesses.

The bill, designed to eliminate present quick adoption procedures and to prevent adoptions without proper investigation, was introduced in the House by Representative Norton. It was initiated by District welfare agencies and has the support of the Council of Social Agencies and the Juvenile Protective Association.

Under its provisions, the child to be adopted would have lived in the home of his prospective parents for at least six months before petition for adoption is filed with the court.

The court would enter the final decree of adoption only if satisfied that the adoptee is "physically, mentally and otherwise suitable for adoption by the petitioner;" that the petitioner "is fit and able to give the adoptee a proper home and education" and that the change will be for the best interests of the adoptee.

Under present adoption laws, welfare workers point out, there is extensive adoption without proper protection for either the child or the prospective parents. No trial period is provided for, and babies often are adopted at birth.

The bill is part of a three-point legislative program with which District agencies hope to modernize the city's archaic juvenile and welfare laws. The other two bills call for revision of the public welfare act and a new Juvenile Court act.

Former Colorado Governor Jailed 5 Years for Fraud

Indianapolis, July 13 (AP).—Clarence J. Morley, former Governor of Colorado convicted recently of using the mails to defraud in connection with an investment house operated under his name, was given a five-year sentence in Leavenworth Federal Prison today.

Morley, pale and shaking, was supported by court attendants as he stood before Judge Robert C. Baltzell.

He was convicted July 2 with four associates in C. J. Morley & Co., which operated offices in Indianapolis and Evansville, Ind.

Edward Ward, of Evansville, a salesman, was sentenced to 2½ years. The other three had been sentenced previously.

From starting gun to finish line, Lenore's under tension. As pictured at right, even her breathing must be timed to a split second.

Even after an 880-yard race, Lenore comes up smiling. In choosing her cigarette, she pays particular attention to mildness. "I've found I can smoke Camels as often as I like, thanks to their mildness," she says.

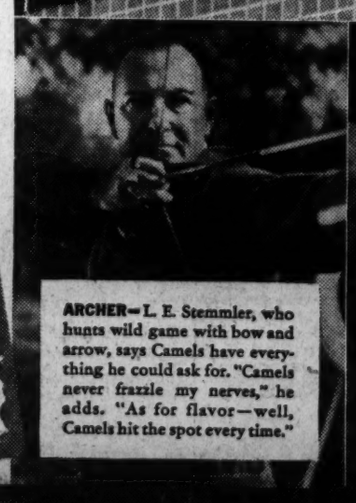
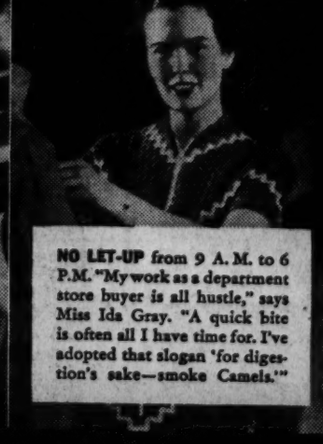
{Right} OVER HER AFTER-DINNER CAMELS, LENORE WINGARD SAYS:

"FOR digestion's sake—smoke Camels,' is a rule with me. I think it's grand the way they help me to enjoy my food, even when I feel tired or tense. Smoking Camels seems to put me in just the right mood at mealtimes and helps me to have a feeling of well-being afterward. Camels set me right!"

Because Camels are so mild—because they are made from such costly tobaccos—you can smoke them steadily, without jangled nerves. At mealtimes, Camels encourage a free flow of digestive fluids—alkaline digestive fluids—and lend a helping hand to good digestion. And how gentle they are to the throat!

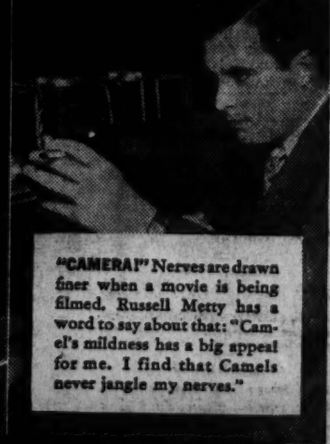


ARCHER—L. E. Stemmler, who hunts wild game with bow and arrow, says Camels have everything he could ask for. "Camels never frazzle my nerves," he adds. "As for flavor—well, Camels hit the spot every time."



NO LET-UP from 9 A. M. to 6 P.M. "My work as a department store buyer is all hustle," says Miss Ida Gray. "A quick bite is often all I have time for. I've adopted that slogan 'for digestion's sake—smoke Camels.'"

"THE MRS. likes to see me enjoy a hearty meal," says auto-mechanic Frank Mullady. "With Camels, I feel all set at mealtimes. Yes, sir—smoking Camels helps me feel my digestion's tuned up."



"CAMERA!" Nerves are drawn finer when a movie is being filmed. Russell Metty has a word to say about that: "Camel's mildness has a big appeal for me. I find that Camels never jangle my nerves."

Defense Hints Threats in Trial Of Bond Racket

To Prove State Witness Was Forced to Testify, Counsel Indicates.

Attorneys for the nine men on trial at Upper Marlboro, Md., for conspiracy implied yesterday they would attempt to prove threats were used to induce at least one State's witness to testify against the defendants.

"You weren't told you would be indicted if you didn't come down here?"

When Caul hastily replied, "no," Judge William Loker interrupted. Addressing himself to Sasscer, he said:

"You are asking these questions. Are you fishing or have you any evidence to back up or support that declaration that he was told that he would be indicted if he didn't come out here?"

Objection Removed.

Frank Hall, another defense attorney, took the floor and told the court he would be glad to approach the bench and tell how the defense proposed to follow up the question.

On the assurance that the defense would introduce evidence to support its implication, the court rested its objections.

The trial got under way yesterday after the jury had been completed with the selection of Murray L. Ball, of Landover, and Thomas Talbert, of Upper Marlboro. The other ten men on the panel were picked Monday. Only two of the 12 men are from the northern section of the county where the alleged arrest racket was centered.

Hampered by frequent objections by the defense, the trial moved slowly.

Led by Sasscer, the defense succeeded in preventing both the arrest book at the Hyattsville police substation and the book recording commitments and releases from being introduced as evidence.

Although declared "inadmissible," the arrest book was identified by former Police Chief Jeremiah J. Crowley as the one in which records of all arrests were ordered to be kept.

The committing book also was identified by George Wiseman, employed at the Hyattsville substation to furnish meals to the prisoners.

Plea Overruled.

On the alert for legal loopholes, Sasscer also objected to the admission of certain police court jackets on the grounds that a recent ruling by a Baltimore court of appeals had held that the police court system operative at the time the nine were indicted was unconstitutional. The court, however, overruled this objection.

Frost, owner of a car driven by Lensing Caul, colored, described to the jury the circumstances surrounding their arrest June 15, 1936, by Claude A. Reese, who at that time was a member of the county police force.

"They (police) signed him (Caul) up for driving 60 miles an hour and signed me up for letting him drive that fast."

Caul took the stand and told the court that he and his brother, James, had visited the home of Elmer Pumphrey, of Suitland, Md., formerly a professional bondsman, who is also under indictment.

"I went to see him (Pumphrey) a few days after I got out of jail," Caul said. "We talked about the cheapest way of getting out of this. He told us if we paid $100 he would let us go. I told him we couldn't get $100 and asked him if he could do with a little less. He said maybe."

Says He Paid $65.

On July 1, 1936, the day his case was scheduled, Caul said he paid Pumphrey $65 in the corridor of the Hyattsville police station.

"Wasn't that the balance on the bond fee you owed Pumphrey?" Sasscer asked.

"No," the witness replied.

"Who put up your fine?" Sasscer countered.

Caul replied: "There wasn't any put up."

Sasscer repeatedly asked the witnesses if they had talked with any representatives of the Keystone Automobile Club, which began the investigation into allegedly corrupt practices in the Hyattsville County police substation last fall.

The purpose of these questions, he explained to the court, was to establish grounds to prove the witnesses were biased. Sasscer is a member of the advisory board of the American Automobile Association.

The Postilion, Knee Deep in Wheat, Is Helped to a Job

TOM McCARTHY.

He gave me a ride near Elmdale, and when I mentioned that I was looking for a job, he immediately turned the car around and drove to a railroad siding, where his grain was being loaded. When we arrived there, we found the opening he had counted on had already been filled by another wandering workman.

Before resuming the drive toward the West, the young wheat grower ran over to the general store and returned with a number of bottles of a popular soft drink which he passed out to the sweating "wheat scoopers" who were loading the cars with grain. Then a peculiar ritual was performed. Each workman took one swig from his bottle and held it out toward the employer.

He then filled the neck of each bottle with a colorless liquid. The holder of the bottle placed a thumb over the top and turned the bottle upside down, allowing the two liquids to mix. The ritual performed, the apparently innocent soft drink was consumed with appropriate facial grimaces, indicating satisfaction.

When the young wheat grower came back to the car, he put the mystery bottle in the pocket of the door. It was 190 proof grain alcohol!

WHILE RIDING West down the line, he gave me an explanation of my difficulty in finding work, which tallied with the partial explanations I already had received.

Years ago, freight trains rolling into Kansas at harvest time were crowded with itinerant workmen from as far south as Texas, and as far east as New York. In those days there had been harvest jobs for the asking. Now, all of that had been changed by the introduction of the "combines." A mechanical farm aid, drawn by a tractor, it does away with the shocking and the threshing of the wheat. It compresses into a single afternoon what formerly required many days and many men.

Before the introduction of the "combine," the wheat would be cut and bound mechanically. It then would be set up in shocks to cure in the sun. Then it would be pitched on wagons and brought to the thresher. Now, the "combine," needing but two men for its operation, cuts and threshes the wheat in a single operation. The work of a crew of men, over a period of several days, can now be accomplished in an afternoon.

Another reason he gave for the comparatively scant employment possibilities, was the fact that for several years Kansas hadn't had a real wheat crop. Now that they had one, the farmers had no money to hire hands to harvest it. They were trading work among themselves to get their wheat harvested. Little communities of farmers were going from one field to another, shocking and threshing their neighbor's grain in exchange for the same service to themselves.

As you move west from Emporia, the wheat grower pointed out, the fields of grain grow in size, and strangely enough, for that very reason, the chances for the itinerant workman become smaller. In the large fields the "combine" is the only harvester. Only on the small farms, which as yet cannot afford this aid, does the harvest hand find an opening.

It was true, there were still jobs to be found, but the day when the Kansas farmer begged for help in the fields was definitely on the wane.

• • • •

AT THE GRAIN elevator in Clements they told me to see "Les" about a job. The motor governing the elevator had broken down and they would be able to use extra men for a couple of hours loading the wheat directly from the back of trucks into the freight cars. I crossed the dirt road which is the main street, and found "Les" in the barn-like building which served as a garage, stable, storehouse, business office and sleeping quarters.

"Les" wasn't a very prepossessing young fellow when I first saw him. The wheat dust from the elevator had made him anything but a pretty sight. Sweat streaked his dirty face, his eyes were bloodshot, and his cracked lips were outlined by a dirty accumulation of dried saliva and dust.

He hired me with the understanding that I would have a job only until the motor of the elevator had been fixed, and I then began a couple of hours of the hardest work I have ever done. My curiosity as to why working with wheat could be a mean job was soon satisfied.

As the truckloads of wheat drove up to the railroad siding, I had to help shovel the wheat grains directly from the back of the truck into the car. It was not a matter of scooping the wheat out the back into a trough at a lower level, as is the common means of unloading. We had to throw the wheat upward over the sideboards of the freight car.

A wheat grain, to all appearances, is an inoffensive little article, but believe me it harbors more devilish devices of torture than anything of its size. In the first place it is dusty, with the accumulation of months of dried Kansas soil. In the second place, it is sharp and as you stand knee deep in it, shoveling it into a freight car, it filters into your shoes, fills your socks, and conditions your feet more stringently than would fire-walking with the Japanese. In the last place, it is heavy and, after the first half hour of shoveling, you imagine the tiny wheat grains have been transformed, and that you are actually laboring your shovel through endless loads of lead shot.

THAT JOB was one job which left no possible opening for taking your ease. There were only two alternatives: you could either shovel up, over, and into the car or, you could go into the car yourself and scoop the wheat away from the entrance. In either event, your footing consisted of wheat grains which closed in about your legs up to the knees, leaving only the upper part of your body free. If you shoveled from the outside, the necessity of throwing the grain upward soon convinced you that some fiendish spirit had magnetized your shovel to the floor. If you went into the freight car, the shoveling was easier, and you could bluff a bit, but every movement raised a thick cloud of dried wheat dust, which redeposited itself in your nose, throat, eyes, ears and lungs.

My progress as a shoveler of wheat had its audible accompaniment. When I was working outside the car, every toss of the shovel was accompanied by a grunt. When I was working inside the car every move was accomplished with a sneeze.

I could now readily understand why "Les" looked in rather bad shape as sweat streaked my face, my eyes became bloodshot, and dust caked on my cracked lips.

At the end of an hour, "Les" came around to see if I were holding up.

"How are you making out?" he asked.

"Nah tho goo," I answered, endeavoring to convey that I was not doing too well. My tongue had thickened and was about as effective a conversational piece as a chunk of dried fur.

"Don't get sick," he warned. "Sometimes they get sick, if they're not used to this work, and then the boss won't pay them off." The boss was a short-sleeved man in white trousers who had appeared on the job after my hiring.

About 20 minutes later, the boss came around and passed out cans of beer to the wheat shovelers. "Aha," I thought, "so he's trying to sabotage us. He wants to make sure he doesn't have to pay some of us off. He wants to see which ones drop by the wayside, after that can of beer."

While mentally resolving, "Oh no you don't mister! You can't sabotage me with that beer!" I made a grab for a can of the stuff and it sure tasted good.

It might be added that I lasted out the two hours required to fix the motor in the elevator and returned to Emporia with 70 cents for my labor.

Indian Tribe's Hope to Regain Sacred Thunderbird Boosted

Washington Office Indicates 'Break' on Plea to New York Museum to Return Skull That Guarantees Rain, Prosperity.

The promise of a development, perhaps within ten days, in the case of the absent Thunderbird was given yesterday by the Office of Indian Affairs.

Meanwhile, it is dry where the Gros Ventres Tribe lives in North Dakota and they want their Thunderbird. They figure you can't have rains in North Dakota if the Heye Foundation Museum in New York keeps the sacred bird. This on the wor of the Thunderbird.

Thunderbird promised them rain would never fail, and they should never be in want, so long as they kept his skull, but several years ago someone, allegedly without authority, sold the sacred bundle to the museum for $175.

Since then, protest has run like a wild dog across the plains.

After lengthy representations to the museum, the Office of Indian Affairs believes a "break" is about to come. Arthur Mandan, chairman of the tribal council, has appealed to the Washington office for help toward the recovery. Chief Long Bull, of the Gros Ventres, pointed out that the Thunderbird had been in tribal custody for 180 years.

The Indian Office yesterday referred to the Thunderbird as a bundle of sticks and feathers, but dispatches indicate some kind of skull is involved. The dictionary refers to it as "an imaginary bird, the personification or cause of thunder—common in the legends of primitive peoples." The encyclopedia ignores it. The Gros Ventres want it.

Norfolk Office to Open.

G. R. Parker, regional director of the Social Security Board, announced a field office of the board will be opened today in Norfolk, Va., with Horace K. Dickson, Norfolk, as manager.

Dr. Daily Is Promoted By Children's Bureau

Dr. Edwin F. Daily has been appointed director of the Division of Maternal and Child Health, Children's Bureau, of the Department of Labor. He has been with the Children's Bureau for more than a year as assistant director of the division of Maternal and Child Health, with special duty as field consultant in maternal welfare under the social security act.

With wide experience in clinical and research work, Dr. Daily is a member of the American Board of Obstetrics and Gynecology. In his new position, he will have immediate charge of administration of the maternal and child-health service.

Reich's Power Casts Shadow On All Europe

This universal fear of Germany is not primarily due to the efficiency of her army. Man for man and gun for gun the Germans are now, as they were 20 years ago, of exceptional military quality. But the economy behind them is already over-strained. The country they defend is poor in natural resources and, despite the feverish self-sufficiency program, unable to support the strain of protracted large scale modern warfare. None know this fact better than the Nazi leaders themselves. It gives logic to their disclaimers of any aggressive intent.

REGIME'S POTENCY HAS BEEN UNDERSTATED.

BUT WHILE the military threat of the Third Reich has been exaggerated the general potency of the regime there has been understated. There is a dangerous illusion that the Nazi regime is unpopular with the German people and holds its grip only by terrorization.

Unquestionably the dictatorship is feared, criticized, and even to some extent opposed by sizable minorities, particularly among the better educated. But Hitler's power is not based on terrorization and persecution. It is probable that a completely free plebiscite in Germany today would retain him in power by a large majority, and that not merely because of the total lack of any practical alternative.

The name "Nazi" is a contraction for a full title of German National Socialist Workers' Party. And every word in the title has meaning.

The Nazi movement is completely German, glorifying the achievements of that race in a way which necessitates constant comparisons unfavorable to other peoples. It is national in the sense that every form of human expression in Germany is consciously directed to the aggrandizement of the central government.

It is socialist because it recognizes no differences of class or caste between so-called Aryan Germans, offering just as much opportunity, within limits of party policy, to the son of the poor peasant and the son of the great landed proprietor. It is a workers' movement because it gives the wage earner social, recreational and cultural privileges, offsetting his loss of individual liberty with favors which were not his under the old capitalism. In all these respects, of course, the Third Reich has merely emphasized and developed tendencies apparent before it came to power.

But completely new is the picture of the Nazi movement as a party which guards and glorifies its carefully selected membership of some three millions. The clerk who has the right to wear the swastika knows that the all-powerful government will care for him ahead of the plutocrat who is denied that right.

A REAL SIMILARITY TO SOVIET RUSSIA.

The conclusion forced upon the close observer of present-day Germany is the close similarity of its philosophy to that of Soviet Russia. There are, of course, many exceptions to an exact parallelism. But in both cases a totalitarian state works by degrees to improve the lot of submerged elements in the population.

In both cases the direction of policy is entrusted to a fanatical, highly organized and, if necessary, ruthless party of the elect. In neither case is any opposition tolerated; in both the dictatorship is wholly sincere and convinced of its good intentions. And in Russia and Germany alike no private interest, whether cultural, capitalistic or clerical, is for one moment allowed to oppose its claims to what the government thinks are those of society as a whole.

Even the superficially bitter antagonism between Germany and Russia is, paradoxically, a proof of their underlying similarity. Each resents the way in which the other is doing essentially the same thing. And if the propaganda machinery in both countries were thrown into reverse Berlin and Moscow could, in a month's time, indulge in a love feast as emotional as their present antipathies.

The greatest difference between Nazi Germany and Communist Russia, as I see it, is that in the first case the totalitarian state is doing very systematically what it is doing rather sloppily in Russia. The distinction, in other words, is one of national temperament, and of the means to the end rather than the end itself.

The identity of the ultimate objective, the subordination of every citizen to the arbitrary decrees of a group which identifies its will with popular welfare, is the fact of salient significance.

SAME CONCLUSIONS POSSIBLE ELSEWHERE.

EXACTLY THE same conclusions, of course, should be drawn about Fascist Italy and the lesser dictatorships of central and eastern Europe. Italy, like Germany, is killing the capitalist system by attrition rather than by amputation. Because Mussolini is more of an opportunist and less of a mystic than either Lenin or Hitler, his country has been free from such ideological persecutions as those directed against the Jews in Germany or the kulaks in Russia. But these differences are all less significant than the overwhelming similarity whereby, in every case, each dictator rephrases the famous edict of Louis XIV—"I am the state."

The civil war in Spain will naturally be cited as evidence that there is a huge difference between the Fascist and Communist ideal—a difference so profound that men are willing to lay down their lives on foreign soil in order to sustain it. Unfortunately there is nothing new in the voluntary sacrifice of life for pure illusion.

Because the great European dictatorships are all similar in their philosophy of government does not mean either that their national policies will necessarily be friendly, or that they will be hostile. It merely means that the mutual relations of these intensely egotistical regimes will be completely uncertain and unpredictable, thereby adding enormously to the general world uneasiness and fear of war.

It must be remembered that Soviet Russia for years denounced the League of Nations as a malevolent tool of capitalism, then suddenly became one of its most ardent members, merely because Moscow was fearful of a joint attack by two nonmembers of the League—Germany and Japan.

DICTATORS' REASONS ARE OPPORTUNISTIC.

FOR THE SAME opportunistic reasons Germany and Italy have now developed a close working agreement over Spain, where both of them expect important material gains if Franco wins. In another different crisis Mussolini and Stalin, or Hitler and Stalin, might easily decide to co-operate actively for a common end. The totalitarian state will shift the basis of its foreign policy with the same overnight decision that it uses in altering the emphasis on a four-year plan.

That fact adds immeasurably to the uncertainty in Europe. That fact makes schemes for economic co-operation seem rather futile as a fundamental solution, just as it makes discussion of disarmament now ridiculous to any practical mind. It is not any popular desire for war, which nobody wants, that makes Europe seem so precarious now. It is the existence of an international anarchy in which, over large areas, public opinion has ceased to count, and under which a few fallible men behind closed doors may at any moment make decisions spelling disaster for the entire world.

Not peace or war, but democracy or dictatorship, is the underlying issue. It was an issue before the Nazi rise to power. Both Russia and Italy foreshadowed the problem. But neither of those countries is strong in the sense that Germany is; neither of them is efficient in the way that Germany is; neither of them is as fundamental a menace to liberal ideas as is Germany. It took Hitler, strange little symbol of the revolt of the masses, to sharpen the issue to the acuteness which it has today.

Can America be immune from this struggle? Could there be a mandatory neutrality policy which would keep us isolated not merely from the consequences of a war but also from the underlying titanic clash of ideas now raging in Europe?

It seems unlikely. The earliest days of this republic, then physically isolated and politically unimportant, were deeply affected by the ferment of antagonistic philosophies in eighteenth century Europe.

There are many reasons, deserving at least summary examination, for believing that an immunity impossible then would be far more difficult to achieve today.

The concluding article in this series will be published tomorrow.

James Roosevelt Denies Candidacy

By the Associated Press.

James Roosevelt, son and secretary of the President, said yesterday published reports he might announce his candidacy for Governor or Lieutenant Governor of Massachusetts were "one of those annoying things."

The reports followed the younger Roosevelt's action in inviting 229 Massachusetts publishers and editors to a conference in Boston Friday to consider means of absorbing in private industry 35,000 workers being dropped from WPA rolls in that State.

House Upsets Veto on Farm Interest Slash

Treasury about $52,000,000 in the next two years. The present emergency rate was enacted in 1933 when the farm income was at its lowest ebb. Since then that income has more than doubled."

The House and Senate both voted to override a Presidential veto a few weeks ago when Congress insisted on extending the time for World War veterans to convert their life insurance policies. Otherwise, the action yesterday was without precedent this session.

Senate Action Delayed.

The Senate cannot act until the court bill debate ends or suspends. The overridden veto yesterday was added to the mass of legislation piling up behind the court bill.

The bill affects about 640,000 Federal Land Bank borrowers and some 455,000 borrowers from Land Bank commissioners. It continues the emergency rate of 3½ per cent for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1937, and puts a 4 per cent rate on all outstanding loans for the next fiscal year, beginning July 1, 1938.

Loans by commissioners in the next two years had the interest rate cut from 5 per cent to 4 per cent by the measure, with the total amount of loans involved approximating $3,250,000,000.

Rayburn fought valiantly for a sustained veto, saying that if it was overridden homeowners and other classes of borrowers from the Government could logically demand lower interest rates.

"Government borrowers, from this precedent, could ask concessions amounting to from $150,000,000 to $200,000,000 a year," he said.

Jones held that this was all right, declaring that all Federal borrowers should pay lower rates, with farmers paying not more than 4 per cent.

Pleas to balance the budget, in line with the President's veto message, were unheeded, and Representative Clifford Hope (Republican), of Kansas, was applauded when he urged over-riding the veto, saying:

"The emergency of the farmers in the country is still with us, despite improving farm prices."

Herrick's Son Leaves Life Estate to Widow

New York, July 13 (AP).—The will of Parmely W. Herrick, financier and son of the late Myron T. Herrick, former Ambassador to France, filed for probate today, left his widow, Mrs. Agnes B. Herrick, a life income of $25,000 a year from a residuary trust and the balance of income after payment of $10,000 a year to her son, Parmely W. Herrick, jr.

After death of the mother the entire residuary income is to go to the son and when he reaches the age of 35 he is to receive the principal.

day. From that point it climbed rapidly back to the 90s.

Continued showers brought relief to the Middle West, according to an Associated Press bulletin, but weather forecasters said the recession would be temporary.

High humidity increased discomfort, but the death rate attributable to heat droped sharply and the fatality list remained almost stationary at 360.

"Not Much Change."

Promise of slightly cooler weather in parts of Iowa, Minnesota and Wisconsin and higher temperatures in South Dakota, Nebraska and Kansas, were exceptions to the general prophesy of weather observers that there would be "not much change of temperature for today."

The Associated Press reported considerable destruction caused by rain in several sections of the heat belt. The Illinois River broke over its banks below Peoria, Ill., washed away houses, spread over 10,000 acres of farm land. Roads were damaged and several bridges washed away in the sudden flood. Preparations were made to dynamite a levee to relieve pressure of the water. Some 40 or 50 families were forced to leave their homes.

A rainfall of 4.78 inches was reported at Hannibal, Mo., and Pierre, S. Dak., recorded 1.58 inches. Flood waters washed out 1,200 feet of railway track in the Belle Fourche region of South Dakota.

Nine inches of rainfall flooded streets and basements of business houses at Blockton, Iowa. In Chicago two heavy downpours sent temperatures down 15 degrees from the day's high of 88. Discomfort there continued with relative humidity reported at 98.

Showers also broke the heat spell in New England. Heavy rains last night caused unestimated damage in rural districts near Wheeling, W. Va.

Official of PWA Leaves Service

By the Associated Press.

Public Works Administrator Ickes announced yesterday that Jabez G. Gholston, formerly director of the PWA inspection division, had been separated from the service without prejudice because of alleged lobbying activities.

Ickes declared Gholston, through a mistaken sense of loyalty to PWA, had lobbied in connection with the emergency relief appropriation act of 1937.

Gholston, the PWA announcement said, sent a form telegram to members of the PWA staff in the field which they in turn were to cause to be sent to members of Congress over the signatures of municipal authorities, contractors, architects and others.

out between Representative Vinson (Democrat), Kentucky, and Representative Treadway (Republican), Massachusetts, when the latter demanded Roosevelt submit his income-tax returns for a five-year period when he was in the insurance business.

"I shall be glad to," the witness responded.

Treadway asserted he had hoped to avoid asking for the returns, and Vinson accused the Massachusetts Representative of being "dumb." The two began shouting at each other and quieted only after Representative Doughton (Democrat), North Carolina, committee chairman, had rapped repeatedly for order.

SEC Attorney Testifies.

After Roosevelt had reiterated he had no objection to examination of his returns, the committee decided to consider the matter in executive session. When Roosevelt stepped from the hearing room, the committee pushed toward completion of its list of wealthy taxpayers.

Testimony yesterday, which may be the last at this Congressional session, was given by O. John Rogge, Securities Commission attorney loaned for the investigation.

Mentioning Hearst's name, Rogge said tax payments by companies he controls demonstrated the need for reducing deductions allowed under the present revenue laws.

Inserting a diagram of Hearst companies into the record to illustrate what he termed a "hierarchy of corporate structure," Rogge said Hearst was the principal stockholder in American Newspapers, Inc., listed as the top holding company in the structure.

Saved $5,111,708.

Saying in 1934 and 1935 Hearst received 85 per cent of dividends paid by American Newspapers, Inc., Rogge added that if this company and two others—Hearst Corporation and Hearst Magazines, Inc.—were ignored and 85 per cent of their income treated as income to the publisher, the latter would have paid $5,111,708 in additional taxes for 1934 and 1935.

Making no charge of illegality against Hearst or any of the other listed taxpayers, Rogge said his computations showed Kettering saved $810,773,000, in taxes for 1934-36 through personal holding companies.

Kettering, the witness said, organized C. F. Kettering, Inc., and transferred to it shares in General Motors Corporation and General Motors Securities Corporation.

Delaware Corporation.

Paley, Rogge said, formed the Park Corporation under Delaware laws in 1932, using it "as a depository of a considerable amount of Columbia Broadcasting system, Inc., stock, as well as other investments."

"By using the holding company device," the witness continued, "he managed to reduce his taxes $35,153 in 1936."

Naming Ruppert, Rogge told the committee he saved $102,470 in taxes for 1935 and 1936 by using a personal holding company.

U. S.-New Zealand Pact Is Predicted

By the Associated Press.

Walter Nash, finance minister of New Zealand, said after a call on President Roosevelt yesterday he believed a reciprocal trade agreement would be negotiated between his country and the United States.

He was accompanied to the White House by the British Ambassador, Sir Ronald Lindsay. After a 20-minute talk with the President he went to the State Department to continue trade conversations begun yesterday with Secretary Hull.

Change in Site Stirs New Fight On Memorial

Government engineers, however, expressed the opinion such a shift is impossible, unless the John Russell Pope design for the monument is reduced considerably. Yet it was learned the commission intends, under its new plan, neither to alter the design appreciably nor abolish the nearby polo field.

The original plan, which brought down a Nation-wide storm of disapproval when it was adopted last February, would have divided the Tidal Basin into three minor pools and created a gridiron of roadways leading to the memorial, which was to stand on an artificial peninsula.

Although the commission was authorized to spend $3,000,000 on the project, execution of the original Pope scheme would cost from $4,500,000 to $6,000,000, the House Library Committee was informed last April by John L. Nagle, National Park Service engineer, at hearings on the Treadway bill.

Many Other Objections.

"There are other objections to the Tidal Basin location besides preservation of the cherry trees," Treadway said last night. "For one thing, there is the too-close proximity to the other memorials. The sentiment of the country, I think, is to let the area alone. There are other good sites for the Jefferson Memorial."

Although Chairman Kent E. Keller, of the House Library Committee, announced shortly after hearings were concluded last April the bill would be reported favorably, the measure has not yet been laid before the House. Keller's latest declaration, however, is the measure will be introduced "in a few days."

Recognizing a "difference of opinion" over the commission's original plan, Boylan said the commission "is ready to modify its proposal for the setting of the memorial to permit retention of the informal treatment of the Tidal Basin along its present lines."

The modification, he said, will reduce the cost of the project and cause no interference with existing traffic conditions. Boylan emphasized that adoption of the resolution by the commission yesterday will prevent any change in the basin's contour and obviate destruction of the cherry trees.

The second deficiency bill contained a $500,000 item to enable the commission to begin construction operations, but it was eliminated before the supply measure reached the House floor.

Madrid Forces Fascist Retreat by Matching Franco's Strength in Air

Barrage Helps Leftists Drive Deep Salients

New Plane Fleet Bombs Rebel Lines to West in Fierce Assault.

By the Associated Press.

Madrid, July 13.—Spanish government forces drove powerfully tonight against bitter insurgent opposition to push out their salients west of Madrid.

Observers returning from the battlefront reported artillery, thundering night and day, was pounding villages to pieces, while the government, matching the insurgent strength in the air, raided enemy camps and concentrations.

Government pilots virtually cut off insurgent defenders from reinforcements near Villanueva del Pardillo, 15 miles west and slightly north of Madrid, with protracted bombing and machine-gunning expeditions.

On the Basque front in northern Spain, government fliers attacked their foe's line from Somorrostro west of Bilbao to the Valmaseda sector.

In the east, Gen. Sebastian Pozas, commander of the government forces in the Zaragoza-Teruel sector, reported Albarracin "not only has been completely surrounded, but also government troops now are fighting in the streets of the town."

He said insurgents still held some well-fortified houses in the town, which is nearly 120 miles east of Madrid.

The government offensive west of the capital, designed to break the insurgent siege, was stated by one witness of the fighting to have opened up a new phase of the war in size and intensity.

"The government has been able to put into the field mechanized power to match, and perhaps more than match, the rebel air force.

"Day and night there is a steady bombing by both sides, with government planes roaring over rebel positions time after time, machine-gunning and bombing.

"The rebels are doing most of their bombing at night, but from time to time there are teriffic air fights when rival chasers clash. Some times there are 40 to 50 planes on both sides engaged."

France Controls Frontier.

Paris, July 13 (AP).—France reasserted control of her Pyrenees frontier tonight in protest against Portuguese withdrawal from cooperation with the 27-nation nonintervention program to keep munitions and men from reaching war-torn Spain.

The 1,500 foreign agents guarding the Franco-Spanish frontier for the nonintervention group were replaced by French gendarmes and Mobile Guards.

This action did not mean the border was opened to arms and volunteers to Spain, French authorities declared, however, stating the French guards were instructed to keep up the watch for contraband traffic.

Eden, 4 Envoys Confer.

London, July 13 (AP).—The envoys of four nations dispatched to their governments details of Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden's newest plan for reconstituting international control to isolate the Spanish civil war.

In separate half-hour conferences, Eden talked with the four ambassadors—Charles Corbin, of France; Count Dino Grandi, of Italy; Joachim von Ribbentrop, of Germany, and Ivan Maisky, of Russia.

The substitute program to revitalize the 27-nation nonintervention policy was kept secret, but informed sources said the four governments would consider the plan before Lord Plymouth calls a nonintervention committee meeting, probably later this week.

Necessity for a new patrol scheme was increased during the day as France officially ended the international patrol of her southern frontier.

Duce's Intervention Charged.

London, July 13 (AP).—Julio Alvarez del Vayo, former Spanish government foreign minister, charged today visits exchanged between leaders of the Spanish insurgent revolt and Premier Mussolini of Italy constituted "a clear case of Italian intervention in Spain."

Del Vayo accused the Italian premeier of holding conferences with Spanish insurgent chiefs prior to the outbreak of the civil war a year ago.

On May 4 The Washington Post printed an exclusive dispatch by Jay Allen revealing for the first time existence of alleged documents in secret files of Spanish monarchist leaders and in Italian consulates, said to prove Mussolini had been promoting a rebellion against the republic.

The accusations were made before a private meeting of House of Commons members, including representatives of all parties.

The former foreign minister also quoted from what he said was documentary and other evidence to substantiate his charges.

31 Italian Dead Listed.

Rome, July 13 (AP).—An official statement tonight listed 31 more Italians killed in the Spanish insurgent conquest of the Basque capital of Bilbao, raising to 644 the officially admitted Italian death toll in the Spanish civil war.

King, Queen Tour Wales for 2 Days On Visit of State

London, July 13 (AP).—King George and Queen Elizabeth, traveling overnight by royal train, tomorrow will begin a two-day, 250-mile tour of the principality of Wales in the second of their visits to their realms.

After a week at the palace of Holyrood House in Edinburgh, they will make brief ceremonial stays in Newport, Cardiff, Swansea, Aberystwyth and Carnarvon and touch on the Welsh depressed areas.

They plan to be back in London late Thursday. Princess Elizabeth, heir presumptive to the British throne, and her sister, Princess Margaret Rose, will be left at Buckingham Palace for resumption of their lessons.

Most colorful ceremony of the visit will be the rulers' arrival at Carnarvon Castle, cradle of the principality at whose portals Edward I showed the Welsh their first prince in the thirteenth century.

Sino-Japanese Battle Moves Closer to Gates of Peiping

China and will use force if necessary to carry out her plan, authoritative sources said tonight.

These informants declared Japan will send more reinforcements to her North China troops if the situation continues serious, not only to settle the local fighting near Peiping but to force a showdown of long-standing Sino-Japanese issues.

The disclosure came after a cabinet meeting, at which the ministers decided to take strong military measures unless the Chinese central government at Nanking accepts all Japan's terms.

Those demands are:

Withdrawal of all Chinese troops from the fighting zone.

Punishment of all Chinese troops held responsible for the outbreak last week.

"No Ax to Grind."

Foreign Minister Koki Hirota, in an appeal to business leaders to support the government's action in China, declared:

"We have no ax to grind in China, but our rights there must be respected. That is why we are sending reinforcements to enforce our rights and protect the lives and property of Japanese nationals.

"When China returns to normal we will withdraw the reinforcements."

The businessmen had been called together for a conference by the government. Governors of the prefectures were to hold a similar session Thursday.

New York, July 13 (AP).—Chinese Finance Minister Dr. H. H. Kung charged today the Sino-Japanese trouble in the Peiping district resulted from Japan's "premeditated plan to achieve a definite objective," and said the affair threatened world peace.

"Even a casual study of the map," he said in a formal statement, "will show that the control of the Fengtai and Marco Polo Bridge sections means the control of the only two rail communications between Peiping and the north on the one hand and Central and South China on the other."

France Proposes Parley.

Paris, July 13 (AP).—French official quarters said tonight France had proposed tri-power consultations with England and the United States over the North China conflict after China had asked a protest be made to Japan.

These sources said France already was inquiring into the situation through its ambassador at Tokyo, but decision on any action to be taken depended upon the outcome of talks with London and Washington.

Riot by 2,000 Socialists Halts French Session

Fist Fights Attend Plea for Readmission of Extremists.

By the Associated Press.

Marseille, France, July 13.—A short-lived riot with 2,000 delegates engaging in free-for-all fist fights temporarily halted the national convention of the Socialist party tonight.

Fighting broke out after the resolutions committee presented a report unanimously rejecting a request for the readmission to the party of extremists who had been expelled for antiparty criticisms.

Vice Premier Leon Blum, French Socialist leader, tried to enter the fray and quiet the fighters, but was held back by friends.

There were shouted appeals for peace and the band started playing the "Internationale." Order was restored after a few delegates were slightly injured.

Support People's Front.

The resolutions committee voted approval of continued participation in the People's Front government after a vigorous appeal by Blum, who headed the first People's Front cabinet.

The committee voted 19 to 13 in favor of supporting Premier Camille Chautemps, the radical socialist who succeeded Blum when a conservative Senate refused him decree financial powers.

Blum's Congress speech disclosed the government is planning to nationalize French railways which at present are subsidized heavily. Between 2,000,000,000 and 3,000,000,000 francs (about $77,20,000 to $115,000,000) a year is now being paid the lines.

King Refuses Van Zeeland's Offer to Quit

Belgian Cabinet Crisis Is Eased When Minister of Justice Resigns.

By the Associated Press.

Brussels, July 13.—A month-old cabinet crisis today led Premier Paul van Zeeland to present his resignation, which was immediately refused by King Leopold III.

The Belgian monarch, however, accepted the resignation of Minister of Justice De la Valeye as a result of Liberal opposition to his participation in the Van Zeeland government.

Observers declared the youthful premier, who returned last week from exploratory talks with President Roosevelt on the possibilities of a board of international agreement to stimulate world trade, would not have survived the crisis except for the prestige of his trade mission.

Action in the difficulty was postponed to permit Van Zeeland to return from the United States.

With De la Veleye out of the cabinet, there was said to be no probability of the Van Zeeland government quitting.

The pending amnesty bill for World War prisoners was considered another factor in the situation. World War veterans and other groups are bitterly opposed to the measure which would free those convicted of war-time treason. The King was said to have lost considerable popularity because of his stand in favor of the bill.

Parliamentary action on the measure was suspended when opposition led to street demonstrations.

A Commendable Veto.

In a vigorously worded message President Roosevelt has explained why he vetoed the bill extending the emergency low interest rates on Federal land bank loans. This bill was passed by the House and the Senate over the protests of Gov. Myers of the Farm Credit Administration and in disregard of the President's appeal for its rejection.

The arguments presented on those occasions have been repeated in substance in the veto message which declares that "there is no justification for continued Government subsidy of Federal land bank interest rates below the unprecedently low rate these banks are now offering farmer-borrowers on a business basis." Abundant evidence to sustain this opinion may be found in the rise in farm prices, the growth of farm income and the greatly increased debt paying capacity of farmer-borrowers.

The President also referred briefly to the larger questions of policy involved in any proposal to grant interest subsidies to farmer-borrowers. If this particular group were singled out for preferential treatment, it would become extremely difficult to deny the same privileges to borrowers dealing with other Government lending agencies. The result might be to encourage an excessive concentration of credit in subsidized agencies, which would interfere with the extension of private financing on a sound basis.

For reasons of policy, therefore, the President had ample justification for his veto. And the cost of subsidization has provided him with still another strong argument for his action. It has also given him an opportunity to tell Congress that he does not intend to permit considerations of political expediency to interfere with his resolution to cut the deficit.

In taking this stand against a project that would entail additional unbudgeted drafts upon the Treasury, the President has shown commendable firmness. While the prompt and decisive overriding of his veto by the House is discouraging it emphasizes the necessity of offering continued and determined resistance to Congressional spending raids. Otherwise the President's promises of a speedy balancing of the budget will be impossible of fulfillment.

Prosperity For Wheat.

Official July 1 estimates indicate that the 1937 wheat crop will amount to 882,287,000 bushels—the largest yield since 1931 and somewhat above the five-year average for 1928-32. The estimated output is approximately 256,000,000 bushels above the actual yield of last year. It should produce a surplus of about 150,000,000 bushels available for export after depleted domestic stocks have been built up. In view of this favorable forecast, and with farm prices for wheat far above the level of a year ago, the outlook for wheat farmers is most promising.

At last we are confronted by a situation which makes it possible to view a surplus as an advantage rather than a liability. The new wheat crop will be coming on the market at a most opportune time, as our own carryover is abnormally low and world supplies are likewise greatly in need of replenishment. With Canadian surpluses likely to be sharply reduced due to drought, the United States is expected to become an exporter of wheat again under unusually favorable conditions.

Of course, the encouraging outlook for wheat does not necessarily mean that farm conditions in general are equally promising. After all, the farm income derived from sales of wheat is relatively insignificant when compared with the total returns from all sources, or even with the returns from livestock and livestock products. But with weather conditions generally propitious so far, and with improved demand for agricultural products, the Department of Agriculture seems justified in predicting that farm cash income in the months ahead will exceed returns of a year ago.

Since the ratio of prices received to prices paid by farmers stood at 93 per cent at the middle of June, the goal of parity at which the AAA aimed may be said to have been virtually attained. Recent analyses of the sources of farm income, moreover, show that the farmer is in receipt of quite large sums from non-agricultural activities. Thus lack of farm purchasing power can no longer be held responsible for any lag in industrial recovery. The farm problem, while not solved, is at least temporarily less acute.

The most urgent question concerns those millions of workers unable to find private employment who must be maintained from the surplus incomes of those engaged in agriculture and industry. The pressure of this idle army would only be accentuated by systematic curtailment of output.

Getting Down To Details.

The first week of debate on the Supreme Court bill was properly devoted to the general implications of executive control over the judiciary. That, of course, is the dominant issue in the fight now being waged in the Senate. It is well to remember, however, that Congress is confronted by a specific bill which is not entirely confined to reorganization of the Supreme Court.

Senator O'Mahoney's address was especially useful because of his detailed analysis of the Administration's substitute bill. No doubt every Senator who speaks for the opposition is inclined to oratorical denunciation of the idea of packing the Supreme Court. But that fight is largely won. When the original bill calling for the appointment of six new justices to the Supreme Bench was abandoned, Senate leaders acknowledged defeat in a straight fight on the court packing issue. The compromise bill was devised to catch votes of legislators who may be able to persuade themselves that the addition of one judge per year to supplement the work of judges over 75 years of age does not amount to packing.

The present task of the opposition, of course, is to defeat the compromise bill. If the Senate is treated to a series of addresses as brilliant and effective as those of Senators O'Mahoney and Bailey, the outcome should not long remain in doubt. For they have shattered the compromise measure almost as completely as the Nation-wide debate since February 5 has battered down the original proposal.

It is strange that so little attention has thus far been given to the details of a bill of such far-reaching importance. No advocate in the Senate has attempted to explain the bill realistically. On the contrary, all the emphasis has been laid on party loyalty and limitation of debate. And, as pointed out by Senator O'Mahoney, sponsors of the measure were apparently ignorant of its most significant provision.

The Senator has done well to ask how the "shall" which the sponsors intended to write was transformed to "may" in the actual drafting of the bill. The provision referred to would give any future President authority to hold a club over the heads of justices beyond 75 years of age. The court might be frequently under the threat of intimidation from the Executive. For the President would have authority to leave aged justices undisturbed or appoint coadjutors for them.

This one vital change would fully justify a return of the measure to the Senate Judiciary Committee for extended study. If the opposition senators drive this point home effectively, they should have strong support for the contemplated motion to recommit the bill. It is clearly evident from the O'Mahoney speech, moreover, that other little understood features of the bill ought to be more fully explored. A flying-squadron of judges who could be dispatched from Washington to hear special cases in any part of the country might detract from an impartial administration of justice no less than a subservient Supreme Court.

In view of the weakness of the substitute bill in these respects and the excellent case for its resubmission to the Judiciary Committee, the opposition may be expected to concentrate its fire more and more upon the specific measure before the Senate.

Americans will no doubt find amusing, if not more than a little irritating, the curious chain of reasoning whereby Andrey Vishinsky, Soviet Attorney General, reaches the conclusion that the American system of government is less democratic than that ostensibly established in Soviet Russia under the new constitution.

As proof that American democracy is really a sham, this official points out, for instance, that New York State with many millions of inhabitants elects no more "deputies" (i. e. Senators) does a State with only a tiny fraction of New York's population. The existence of the House of Representatives, elected on the basis of numbers, is conveniently forgotten. Also ignored is the far more important point that it is not elections or ballots or even majorities that make a land democratic but, as a counterpart to popular rule, the protection of individual liberties even in the face of majority opposition.

Such liberties—freedom of speech, of press, assemblage, religion, habeas corpus, etc.—have been and continue to be trampled under foot in the totalitarian states. So long as that continues to be true any facade of democracy which the dictators may employ to hide the illiberal and anti-democratic aspects of their regimes will be a facade and nothing more.

Yet it is none the less a compliment, if a left-handed one, that spokesmen for Italy, Germany and Soviet Russia are forever comparing their own nations to those lands where liberty still prevails. It reveals, on their part, an inner uneasiness which no amount of bluster and braggadocio can disguise. No matter how strong their particular systems may appear to be, the dictators know they are built on sand.

History records innumerable instances of despotism of which the modern dictatorships are only a recurrence. The capacity of such governments to survive remains now, as heretofore, very dubious. Having as they believe, eliminated the weakness of democracy they seek to appropriate its strength, namely the free acceptance of a regime by those living under it. That is why oratorically, if not actually, they are forever climbing on the democratic bandwagon. But this does not make their pretensions any the less fraudulent.

Insurance For Taxis.

In voting compulsory liability insurance for Washington taxicabs, the House has rendered a long-needed service to the public. Such a measure, if enacted, will bring Washington taxicab service into line with the situation that obtains in other cities. It has long been the custom to require financial responsibility of carriers in other fields of transportation which offer their services to the public for hire.

This has not been the case, so far as taxicabs are concerned, in Washington. Some individual owners of cabs and some of the companies operating fleets of taxis have, of their own accord, taken out insurance. But the practice has been far less general than the public interest demands.

For the taxi drivers union to go out on strike in protest against the salutory action taken by the House is utterly unreasonable. Should it prove, as it doubtless will, that liability insurance adds materially to the cost of operating taxis, a rise in existing rates will be in order. To such a rise, if kept within reasonable bounds, the public is not likely to object, but the question of rates is not a subject with which Congress is competent to deal.

The taxi drivers have a legitimate grievance against the House for failing to couple the insurance bill with a proviso cutting down the excessively large number of taxis now operating in the District. Such power to limit the number of licenses should be given to the Public Utilities Commission. Yet there is a point in the contention of Representative Nichols that the insurance provision will, of itself, bring about a reduction in the number of cabs operating in the District by eliminating operators who are financially irresponsible.

If the Senate is willing to face the local taxicab situation realistically, it will not only accept the liability insurance bill, but will also give the P. U. C. full authority to regulate taxis in the District.

So Do We All.

Since depreciation allowances are permitted when computing taxable earnings from oil wells and mineral lands, why should not movie stars be allowed comparable deductions for the loss of physical attraction through the passage of time? That is a question which an attorney for some of Hollywood's glamorous screen actors is preparing to offer for consideration of the Federal authorities.

It is an intriguing suggestion, although it is doubtful whether much sympathy, official or otherwise, will be aroused by the case of an actor with an income, less taxes, running into multiples of six figures. An equally good argument in favor of deductions for personal depreciation might be made on behalf of physicians, lawyers and other professional men who have a limited period in which to acquire a fortune. To the public who pays, it often seems as if generous allowance had been made for future loss of professional earning power in the bills rendered for services performed.

If anybody is to be given allowances for depreciation of earning power, why pass over the main body of small income taxpayers whose daily toil brings them nearer to the time of enforced retirement on inadequate pensions or still less adequate savings? The Hollywood actors are not the only ones who fall victims to Father Time. Their decline may be more spectacular than that of mere drudges operating machines. But their case does not call for special consideration on that score.

Actors, like others whose incomes are derived from salaries, are harshly treated by comparison with recipients of income from invested capital. The limited deductions permitted for earned income impose real hardships upon persons forced to pay tremendous surtaxes on returns that may not recur. But sympathy goes out to the winner of a sweepstakes almost as much as to some of the lucky stars who have to surrender a proportion of their fabulously large incomes to the tax collector.

Puff And Piffle.

The British House of Lords has been discussing a bill to make divorce easier. One of the controversial issues is the extent to which mental difficulties should be regarded as an automatic dissolvent of the relationship.

In due course of time those sufficiently interested may learn just what position the Earl of Moray takes on the question. But no certain evidence is provided by his declaration that the matter of insanity concerns the House of Lords, "both from an inheritance point of view and from a religious one," much more than it concerns the House of Commons. This may be either a knock or a boost.

And what happened at this point very evidently reduced not only the Lords but also the newspaper scribes to incoherence. The young man (he married Barbara Murray, of New York, in 1924—but what has that to do with it?) marched in front of the throne and, leaning on the rail, nonchalantly lit a cigarette. (Really, my dear!) At which point Lord Fermanagh (always equal to an emergency) led him from the chamber.

After that, of course, one really doesn't care which side the young man takes on the marriage bill. The one point of interest, as any advertising man will tell you, is: What brand of cigarettes does he smoke?

Child On Child Labor.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have recently come into contact with the child labor law for the first time personally. Of course I had heard of it and what it meant but my feelings toward it hitherto have been only respectful of a law that saves young children from manual labor and physical hardships. There is a disadvantage, however, to this law, which I have never heard debated or discussed.

I am a 14-year-old sophomore in a Washington high school and am what is commonly referred to as "an ambitious youngster." I am ambitious. I want to have a job that will pay me a few dollars a week for my own spending money and give me a little experience for professional future. I don't have to make my own living or work my way through high school, but I don't like to accept the half dollar a week that is my allowance. I want my spending money from an impersonal source, I want to be able to say "I have a job," and the child labor law won't let me.

There are others like me. My friends want jobs. There is nothing commercial in our desire other than to be free from asking the family for money. There are many things that stand in the way of us ever achieving the privilege of a job under the age of 16. Those before us have had the same trouble. In a few years we will be able to have jobs and will forget our present day predicament, but others will come and be impatient at their youth, eager to get experience, jealous of older brothers and sisters.

Ours is a hopeless and helpless plea, but some day there may be a provision for that child labor law, or an amendment or some form of change to allow us under 16 to at least have part-time jobs outside of school. RACHEL RYAN.

The Earhart Flight.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The writer agrees with "Exasperated" and with others regarding the fate of Miss Earhart. Since, according to her husband's own statement, she went out on that perilous flight without any object in mind, other than to say that she did something which no one else had ever done, it does seem a hardship on the already overburdened taxpayers to have to hand out $250,000 a day in search of Miss Earhart and her navigator, yet I sincerely hope that both are safe. This is particularly true when one stops to consider that right here in the Nation's Capital 2,600 aged men and women are facing starvation, and, so far as I know, no immediate relief is in sight.

As another writer has said, I, too, am tired of murderers, divorces, foolhardy thrill seekers, birth control (although it is well for many people to control the bringing into the world of unfortunate and undesirable offspring), vivisection and test tube babies, which in reality is legalized illegitimacy.

When we stop to think of the news of the day it is little wonder that our youth are confused, mystified and bewildered, not knowing what is right.

THE VIEWS OF ANOTHER.

Inconsistencies.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The inconsistencies of human beings Should never be surprising. But it is hard to guess whether it is funny or tragic to watch the handsprings of horror over the expense of using the Navy for an errand of mercy instead of destruction!

If it is costing a quarter of a million a day for the Navy to hunt Amelia Earhart, why worry? Isn't it costing that much every day, anyhow, just to maintain that same Navy—with the possible extra item of fuel necessary to go across the Pacific?

The same public goes into spasms over Tugwelltown's cost—another expenditure towards human welfare, but never comments on the appropriations for Army and Navy, modestly reported on the back page—all toward the goal of destruction, spelled defense.

We might easily change the old saying "Millions for defense (destruction), but not one cent for construction"—except to construct memorials to the destruction.

President Must Be Guarded.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Over in Europe it is an accepted custom of long heritage to contribute to a dictator's "build-up" by clearing the "common rabble" from the traversed highways over which the dictators choose to travel. The theory seems to be that a flying cavalcade of uniforms, motorcycles and high-powered automobiles so dazzles the mind of the ordinary citizen that he or she, hat in hand, with head bowed, just feels the breath of power as the pageant of the high and mighty sweeps past!

Last Saturday, while driving down to the Annapolis area I, like thousands of others, had an experience that reminded me sharply of this European custom. Riding north on the four-way 80-foot boulevard (Washington to Baltimore main road), my car with hundreds of other cars one sees at the peak of Saturday afternoon traffic on this road, without even courtesy was waived from the main artery to a side road, already heavily congested with traffic similarly treated. Making the worst traffic jam that it has ever been my misfortune to see. Drivers bewildered, cussing, and looking for a way out, but no one to direct where it was. "Must be a terrible accident to justify complete closing of the Baltimore-Washington wide highway, necessitating scores of Maryland police in uniform and otherwise," was the thought of numerous unfortunates caught in the terrific jam that filled all the side roads near Jimmie Fontaine's.

But actually there was no terrible calamity justifying barrier through one of our heaviest traveled and widest roadways. Explanation—The President was taking a little jaunt down to the Chesapeake to get a little relief from Washington heat! CHARLES COTTON.

The Scottsboro Case.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The "Scottsboro Case" is now at the bar of the common sense of humanity, which is outraged at the previous trials and verdicts, and at the years in jail which the young men are spending.

For this no redress is possible either to them or their families and friends.

The ill-fame of the white citizens of Alabama and the United States will not be lessened even if any or all are adjudged not guilty of violence, given light sentences, or acquitted.

The social insult to the manhood and womanhood of millions of our colored birthright citizens, which is universal in this country, their economic and educational pauperization by prejudicial discrimination, and advertised lynchings by "unknown" whites, constitute a vital menace to the peaceful evolution of America's democracy.

The rest of the world follows the Scottsboro cases, aware of this fact, more intelligently than we do.

Strikes And Taxes.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The prevalent strikes in American industries, very largely due to the encouragement given Mr. John L. Lewis and his followers by the New Deal Administration at Washington, has brought about a better understanding of the true character of union labor organizations, strikes, and strikers.

Strikes involve the use of military force. It would be just as legitimate for the President of the United States to give comfort and encouragement to an invading army as it is for him to give the same encouragement to Mr. Lewis and his strikers. Recent strikes involving armed opposition to police and militia are essentially treasonable.

It is true that wages are not what they should be, but this is not the fault of employers. Capital and labor are equally penalized by a wretched industrial system with excessive taxation. The right way to secure better wages without violence or injustice to anyone is to abolish the present tax system by the adoption of the Henry George single tax plan.

Small Loans Outside D. C.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: On June 25, on the editorial pages of The Post, you ran an editorial "Seal After Sharks," which discussed the District small-loan laws. Considering the situation now prevailing in the District, it was a timely article, but an incorrect statement regarding small-loan companies operating in neighboring States.

Let me quote from the article itself: "As a result Washingtonians needing emergency funds are forced to turn to loan sharks operating illegally in the District or in neighboring States, where they are permitted to charge as high as 42 per cent annually."

Actually, loan companies in both Maryland and Virginia operate under the uniform small-loan law, which has been advocated by the Russell Sage Foundation. In the main it contains the following provisions: On personal loans up to, but not exceeding $300, the maximum legal rate of interest, which may not be deducted in advance, is 3½ per cent per month on the unpaid balance only; lenders must be licensed and bonded and subject to public supervision and examination; and borrowers must be given a copy of the loan contract and receipts for all payments made.

This law was first adopted by Massachusetts in 1911, where it was found that a fair and adequate small-loan law attracted legitimate capital and legitimate business men drove out the evils of loan sharkery and provided protection for the borrower.

Largely through the efforts of the Russell Sage Foundation other States adopted substantially the same law, until it is now in force in 26 States. In each State this law has been passed by the State Legislature and its constitutionality has been affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States. Eight other States have special loan legislation.

In the remaining 14 States there is no specific legislation regulating small-loan companies and it is a recognized fact that in many of them the borrower is placed in a position of disadvantage. Unregulated lenders find little difficulty in evading the slight obstacle of State usury laws, when so inclined. In many cases their interest charges run from 240 per cent to as high as 520 per cent.

In any event it is easily seen that the loan companies of Maryland and Virginia are far from operating illegally. As a matter of fact, they operate under a law which has been tested by time and proven to be fair under a multitude of circumstances. JAMES G. HUNTER.

"That's the one."

Representation?

A member of the United States House of Representatives is reported to have expressed the following opinion as justification for his stand on certain national issues:

"I want to stay in Washington. My wife and two daughters can not stand our little home town of 3,000 or 4,000 people more than 60 days each year. If I oppose the President and am defeated, he would be unwilling to give me an appointment in Washington. If I support him, he will have to take care of me whether or not I am re-elected. That way I cannot lose.

"I would be willing to risk voting against it, but only the thinking people of my district are against it. The great bulk of the people either do not know anything about it or do not care. Why should I stick out my neck to be a hero for the few? It's not my fault but my people's if they do not put a premium on courage. I'm just giving them what they want."

The reporter did not give the Representative's name, but we hope for the sake of the Nation that his views are not held by many of our Congressmen. If the sole aim in the life of our national legislators is to make their future financially secure, then God help the United States.

BOOKS

A Mid-Week Review of Current Publications

A Literary Customs

By Theodore Hall

"AN OLD man in a dry month, waiting for rain." T. S. Eliot's portrait of the elderly is acrid, haunting. Is that old age? "De Senectute" doesn't say so. And yet, when a man's gray hairs come to an ineffaceable majority, there is the question posed him whenever he isn't watching, as if at Charon's customs house: "What Have You to Declare?"

That is the title of an anthology of recollections, of pieces and bits of literature that have stayed with him to his sixtieth year, compiled by that well-lettered diplomat and cosmopolite, Maurice Baring. And that is his device, seen in a dream—the arrival beside the "grim Ferryman that poets write of," the immortal douanier with the placard on his cap: "Chemins de fer de l'Enfer," and the demand that Mr. Baring produce his lists of literary baggage that have traveled with him all his life. There is more than pleasantry in the notion; the substance of this book is one of the three or four kinds of things that a man would dare declare.

Beyond this preamble, "Have You Anything to Declare?" is precisely the sort of book that Aldous Huxley did in "Texts and Pretexts"—a winnowing-out of memorable grains of prose and poetry, and an immediate remark or two by the compiler in his best library-chair voice. No bad project, indeed, for any reader of more than three books.

But if to yoke the efforts of Mr. Baring and Mr. Huxley is to see at once that Mr. Huxley has the brilliant and original mind, this is not to push the present volume to the back of the shelf. A book had best be kept at hand that gives you a line of pure poetry from "Don Quixote:" "For she is as tall as a lance, and as fresh as an April morning." Or a remark of Beaconsfield's: "It is private life that governs the world"—even unto the abdication of kings. Or a nugget of aphorism by Paul Geraldy: "The art of love is to conquer, to possess, to hold a spirit so rich that she supports us, and so poor that she has of us the same need we have of her."

* * * *

HERE is the delight of discovery in all the provinces of letters from Homer to Andre Maurois. Dr. Johnson once said: "Any man who wears a sword and a powdered wig is ashamed to be illiterate." And Mr. Baring adds, with what sure justice when one transmutes this to eight-cylinder cars and Meadowbrook: "Now it is the other way round; people are ashamed to be literate." No mistake, literacy does not consist in reading Town & Country, or the New Masses either. It consists in the very matters of which there are 311 pages here.

Let us, then, go tasting around in them. Mr. Baring is a polygot, and here is a somewhat dazzling array of originals in Greek, Latin, French, Spanish, Italian, and Russian. No bother, however; most of them are translated for our untutored day, with the real merit that at once we see the universality of thought behind the alien language.

We have no Greek type on this paper, or I would show you how a fearsome-looking line of the "Odyssey" comes out: "Then and there our best men were killed." Says Mr. Baring: "A note struck by Homer again and again," and at another place: "Homer never thought of war except as an unmixed evil." This is a salutary draught as antidote for Virgil's romantic "Sweet and proper it is to die for one's country," so pretty a phrase when carved on marble. But Homer knew. It was Kipling in his autobiography who said that perhaps Lincoln went too far when, over the already dying practice of slavery, he had 3,000,000 men killed. He meant in the long range, genetically speaking. The loss of those American blood lines is enough to give even a jingoist pause.

* * * *

BUT there are lighter matters suggested in this book. There is the reply a Russian lady made to someone who said a clever man had married a stupid woman: "You have to be remarkably stupid to be too stupid for a man." That has a ring one would wake up in the night to appreciate again. There is Andre Gide's remark that French prose is like a pianoforte without a pedal. There is Balzac's: "Admiration is always fatiguing to the human species." There is even this from Sophocles: "Only the woman who knows the cares of wedlock by experience knows what I endure." To which Mr. Baring appends: "Any wife to any husband."

Still, this is a book not to chuckle at, but to mull over. Here are some of the best germinal passages. From Napoleon: "I know men, and I tell you that Jesus Christ was not a man." From Goethe: "Mozart died in his thirty-sixth year. Raphael at about the same age. Byron when he was only a little older. But each of them had completely fulfilled his mission and it was time they should go, so that there should be something left for others to do in a world which has been planned to last a long time." From Flaubert: "Our ignorance of history makes us calumniate our time. It has always been that way."

* * * *

YET in all this we must not pass over Mr. Baring's own wares. His marginal gloss does not, as in the case of Mr. Huxley, rise up to discharge lightning between your eyes, but his sedateness often holds remarkably good stuff. Take the last lady, so carefully named as to indicate my own ignorance. Mr. Baring believes she is bound to be an imminent discovery; I myself would make bold to say "flare," passing on to you this bit of witty credentials: "Mrs. Digby Vallence was tall and spare, with a small face, big eyes, and a large mouth. Digby was fond of saying that his wife's face was geometrically impossible. The parts were greater than the whole. She was a very amiable, intelligent woman, who played Schumann with a weak wrist, and was noted for her cooking recipes."

Mr. Baring's theme—from the "Odyssey" at the start of the book—is the swift revolutions which occur in literary taste. Time and again he is defending valiantly an old favorite in temporary eclipse, now Swinburne, now George Eliot, now George Meredith. Baudelaire, he finds, is the one poet in his lifetime who has never gone out of favor with the literary. But there are scores of other topics. Was not the language of Shakespeare very complicated, even for his time? What French writer lasts best through a lifetime's taste? Is not the mark of a great poet his ability to pilfer lines successfully? Is not Catholicism impossible to understand from the outside? In writing, must observation come first, or the idea?

I hope you will be sufficiently piqued by these to take up "Have You Anything to Declare?" and find what a good, sound, seasoned mind thinks while reading.

"HAVE YOU ANYTHING TO DECLARE?" by Maurice Baring. (Knopf, $2.75.)

Prize Novel Winner Looks Over Small-Time Enterprises.

By Cullison Cady.

In "Ferment," Mr. McIntyre's first novel since his "Steps Going Down," which was this country's rather pallid offering in the All-Nations Prize Novel Competition, we are given a picture of the cheap, petty machinations of small-time enterprise and labor unions in Philadelphia. While this novel has a timely theme and while it shows a greater degree of cohesion and unity than the author's earlier work, unfortunately "Ferment" is true to its title in more than one way.

Cast against a background of garment workers, labor racketeers, gumshoers, diner operators, strike-busters, chiselers and undercover artists whose supreme motive force is the broil for money, the novel becomes permeated with the drabness and struggle in the lives of the people with whom it deals. It succeeds in catching their bluntness, their avarice, their vicious secrets and their materialistic illusions. It does this so completely that we can drag into this review that old saw "realistic"—cheerless realism, and perhaps the more realistic in the present-day sense for that.

The central story—there are numerous minor recits embroidered through the tale—turns about the usually frantic efforts of Steve Brown, check-up agent for a defunct strike-breaking organization, and of his brother Tom, taxicab unionist, to obtain Maggie, machine operator in a dress factory, and their sister by adoption. Steve is the splurger, the dreamer of big money, the spoiled, favored one of the two brothers. Maggie, who has come to adore him, is a sentimental creature dominated by a hunger after the exotic. Tom is the plugger, the stolid, pedestrian nature. It is he who advances cautiously, saves, thinks in terms of two bits while the fancier Steve dreams of two grand. All these people are little, squalid and thwarted.

They are finally engulfed and brought near to disaster by the dishonesty and duplicity of the strangely revered Steve. Steve becomes entangled in the shadowy schemes of the shabby former Prof. Jenns who moves mysteriously about propounding nebulous plans for bankers to utilize labor in their supposed struggle for supremacy with the industrialists in the classic manner of the union between industry and money in 1789 to destroy privilege. This gossamer of ideas spun by the flatulent Jenns becomes Steve's Eldorado.

In fact, all the people in the book become more or less involved with Jenns or with Jenns' ideas, which for lack of a better tag might be described as fascistic. As to the ultimate outcome of all this the reader is left dangling at the end of the book.

Jenns is a character one would wish to know more about. As it is he is a vague, almost sinister, figure moving at the back of the action, stimulating most of the smaller people to visions of wealth and power. While it is true that most of the characters have an element of stock in them and while most of the psychological situations are of the common fictional sort, Jenns is a character that fits into no particular mould. He is ruthless, educated, indefinite, passionate, and he has the power to sway people—to a point. Whether this point is an essential mystery in the man or whether it is an oversight on the part of Mr. McIntyre, we hesitate to say.

In any event, while they are perhaps oversimplified, the other characters, what there is of them, are for the most part quite firmly drawn. We miss in Jenns what we have in all the others—a lead motive. With Mrs. Brown it is her memory of the elegance of her father, with Tom it is a stubborn caution, with Maggie it is the desire to visit remote places, with Steve it is the striving for luxury. Needless to say, fate or Mr. McIntyre arranges it so that none of these hopes are realized.

From the point of view of style, Mr. McIntyre has painted for us a gray thing. It is a style suggestive of Hemingway, O'Hara, or Dos Passos, but it is not fortified by the craftsmanship of these authors. It is a novel full of talk—too full—and all of which does not ring true. Nor should one infer that in all the kilometers of dialogue that there are not passages that carry zest and conviction. However, the mood rarely deviates from one of skullduggery, complaint and bargain. In those few cases which we are afforded between the talk the characters are lighted from the subjective angle, with the result that the author has avoided imposing much of himself from which one might gather his feelings about his characters.

In "Ferment" there is almost a complete absence of description, and little chance to present the lyric of despondent climaxes in the lives of its people. The reader is forced to sense the emotional changes in the characters through the conversation, without benefit of the objective. And it is not always easy, for Mr. McIntyre is not yet the master of dialogue he may become.

On the whole, the book is well planned and the characters clearly seen against its backdrop of labor politics. However, in execution, it is a mosaic of interviews not too expertly put together. One is left with the impression that the author wanted to present a timely gravure of the rapidly changing labor world and of the people bound up in that world, and that in order to accommodate all these people and their complicated relationships he has skimped on the force and completeness of his main story and principal persons.

The book is loosely written in parts, yet there is definite promise that once Mr. McIntyre breaks away from his preoccupaiton with the sordid and the staccato brevity of language deemed presently necessary to achieve that effect we may expect from him a cogent, clear novel of significant power and feeling.

Book Ends

By Bett Hooper.

The old gag about the chorus girl who didn't want a book for Christmas because she had one is now topped off by Cliff Fadiman's conclusions in the current issue of Harper's Bazaar . . . True, you may have a book but it depends on what that book is whether or not you may consider yourself a member of the snobbish set . . . The list is (don't read it if you're the type who takes these intelligence tests seriously) as follows:

BETT HOOPER.

Geoffrey Dennis' "Coronation Commentary."
Noel Coward's "Present Indicative."
Somerset Maugham's "Theatre."
Hector Bolitho's "Edward the Eighth."
Daphne du Maurier's "The Du Mauriers."
Virginia Woolf's "The Years."
Oh, dear, that makes me only a snob on a small scale since I've read only three of them . . .

The good brothers of the University of Kansas chapter of the Delta Upsilon Fraternity recently addressed a letter to Stephen Crane in care of the Stephen Crane Association in Newark which said: "Dear Brother Crane: We are attempting to enlarge our collection of pictures of prominent DU's. I feel certain that a picture of one so prominent in public affairs as you will do much to impress visitors and rushees of our chapter at Lawrence . . . If it causes you no great inconvenience, we will be most pleased to receive a picture of you" . . . It probably wouldn't cause Brother Crane a mite of trouble but unfortunately he has been dead for lo these 37 years!

At a recent Friends of the Library luncheon in the Waldorf-Astoria, a group of interesting authors were present . . . Elizabeth Corbett sat next to Jose Jastrow and nearby were Ralph Henry Barbour, Reginald Birch, illustrator; May Lamberton Becker, Blanche Colton Williams and others . . . Now what bothers me is this: suppose none of them had read any of the others' books . . . On the other hand, can't you see them all running to the library beforehand, boning up on their colleagues' heroines' names, etc?

Local girl makes good: I've just finished reading Constance Stratton's story which was awarded a prize by Story Magazine . . . Perhaps because its thesis is decay, I am reminded strongly of Kay Boyle's novel "Plagued by the Nightingale" . . . Constance's reviews have appeared frequently on this page . . . If she keeps up this pace, I will soon be having to get somebody to review "Stratton's latest."

Little, Brown & Co. are broadcasting an almost unique bit of publicity . . . Instead of saying that the book is selling like hot cakes, they are frankly inquiring why Erich Remarque's "Three Comrades" is not enjoying the sale that his former novels did . . . They advance the theory that people believe it to be a war book . . . Also that it has been compared too often to Hemingway's "Farewell to Arms" . . . If you have any good reason why you haven't bought or read the book, Little, Brown would be chawmed to hear from you . . . That's what they say . . .

Emil Ludwig said over his chicken salad the other day that Roosevelt was the first of his subjects ever to tender him a luncheon . . . That's not hard to understand when one considers that his subjects have been Abraham Lincoln, Marie Antoinette, Napoleon and the River Nile . . . "Cleopatra," according to Mr. Ludwig, "was a genial woman" . . . Which probably takes the cake for understatement . . .

"Three teachers, an advertising man, a stenographer, a playwright and a housewife know they have not dreamed in vain," comments the Literary Digest, "for they have been included in famed Edward J. O'Brien story collection for 1937" . . . What, no book reviewers!

Jeanne d'Arc

Surprisingly fresh is Mr. Rainsford's renewal of the tragic story of the gentle lass of Domremy. His verse is spontaneous and easy with a deft change of tempo which enables him to express the varying moods of the poem with clarity and fidelity.

He gives us not at all the amazonian sibyl who stalks through Southey's epic, but a very human little Jeannette who "knows not what the bells are calling for, but only knows they will not be denied." Simple, sincere, child-like, she has that unquestioning faith which is of the stuff that miracles are made.

Nor has the author burdened his work with the stilted formality of epic conversation. There is a classic balance and restraint in the handling of the narrative, but otherwise the epic conventionalities are totally disregarded. Instead, a note of realism persists and a feeling that the author has known "men who slew, and raped, and burned, and shattered, and rode on." Thoroughly convincing is the picture of Charles of Valois, "Dauphin of France by right divine" as he "picked the meat from a pullet's wing and flung it beneath his chair."

In short, Mr. Rainsford, who has known France in peacetime and wartime, has given us a moving narrative poem which is at once the story of the "Maid" and a glowing tribute to the living soul of France.

LEFAY RICHMAN.

New Thrillers

"THE CHESS MURDERS," by Means Davis. (Random House, $2.)

The author has donated an imaginary medical center to Baltimore and proceeded to use it as a background for the murder of a brilliant young researcher. Add to that, ladeez and gintulmen, the "one and only automaton chess player ever exhibited in America" and you have the makings of a really original murder plot.

Rating—Three hard chills and half a dozen hair-raisings.

"ROUND ROBIN," by Graham Ward Bain. (Lippincott, $2.)

Shows what happens when thieves have their stolen goods stolen from them. Robin Hood, a rich young man, acts as "retriever," returning loot to its rightful owners, donating the extra money which falls into his hands to charity and falling in love all at once.

Rating—Slightly faster pulse and a few sophisticated snickers.

A young feature writer, out of material for copy, decides to take three "paying guests" and spend a season at her ancestral home, which is "haunted." Four of her family had already vanished from it into thin air.

"BRAVE YEARS," by William Heyliger. (D. Appleton-Century, $1.50.)

Although no literary gem, "Brave Years," is a book worthy of a niche in your library. Sophisticated novels, interesting biographies, historical and political dissertations, all have their places on the library shelf. But an occasional story of honest-to-goodness people and a simple presentatoin of their everyday problems and struggle for existence is a welcome relief from the envolved, worldly wise books of today.

William Heyliger has chosen a simple plot and unlike a great many authors, has succeeded in confining himself to a presentation and style commensurate with the plot.

Several years out of college, John and Linda find themselves members of that vast, unhappy army of young hopefuls unable to obtain employment and meeting with discouragement at every turn. Very much in love and with the possibility of marriage slipping further away with the passing of each day, their chance comes when Linda's landlady, Aunt Hattie Gow, offers them on a long-term mortgage an 80-acre farm.

Their brave fight to make a go of the farm; their kindly neighbors, the Henry Bindhorst's; the attempt of the executor of Aunt Hattie's estate to foreclose the mortgage on the farm; how the Co-operative Society's Credit Union came to their aid and paved the way to happiness, are all woven into an inspiring and heart-warming story of youth against the world.

Animal Verse

"Under the Tent of the Sky"—a title from a poem by Rowena Bennett—is a collection of animal verse for children, "ages 6-14," the jacket says, but I should raise the latter limit to around 90. The poems—about 200 of them—are arranged in clever groupings, or "chapters," according to subject, each group prefaced by one of Robert Lawson's drawings, which add immeasurably to the charm of the anthology.

Mr. Brewton has made an interesting and lively collection, and it must have been lots of fun doing. One finds old favorites by William Blake, Lewis Carroll, Eugene Field, Christina Rossetti, Robert Louis Stephenson, Alfred Tennyson, even Shakespeare and Emerson, as well as newer juvenile verse by Hilaire Belloc, Elizabeth Coatesworth, Hilda Conkling, Walter da la Mare, Rose Fyleman, Vachel Lindsay, Christopher Morley, Elizabeth Madox Roberts, John B. Tabb, Annette Wynne and many others.

They are all about animals, both real and imaginary, and they make gay family reading.

"DAUGHTER OF THE EAGLE," The Autobiography of an Albanian Girl, by Nexhmie Zaimi. (Ives Washburn, $2.50.)

It is as if time had neglected to pass through the secluded, almost unknown, kingdom of Albania, so few are the signs it has left there. The women are still, as they were centuries ago, the silent servants of men.

Nexhmie Zaimi, whose few years in America have shown her what we would consider curious in Albania, describes their picturesque costumes, their manner of serving meals with one communal bowl, and their custom of dressing the young girls in long black veils. In fact, she views her own country with almost the detachment of an outsider; seeing in retrospect, as if for the first time, the poverty, the flea-bitten peasants, and the strange beauty of the sun-lit salt pits, white beside the blue Adriatic Sea.

But this very sense of separateness, of individuality, may account for Nexhmie's ability to see her country with the clearness of detachment. She has, as heritance from generations of pure ancestry, a proudness, a high intelligence, as well as a healthy sense of fun. At 21 she is as unspoilt and natural as her own untraveled land.

The Court Crisis

By Franklyn Waltman

THOSE citizens who believed that the Senate debate might clarify their ideas about the wisdom and practicality of President Roosevelt's Supreme Court reorganization plan appear doomed to disappointment—that is, if the first five days of debate is a fair sample of the course which this great controversy is to take.

The thunderous oratory which last week went up from Capitol Hill on this issue has created far more confusion than clarification. Instead of an orderly discussion of the fundamental issue involved, we have witnessed the debaters—on both sides, let it be said—engaged in personal and partisan recriminations and bitterness. Instead of generating light, they have generated heat. So, as Shakespeare and Roosevelt would say, "a plague o' both your houses."

For our part we much prefer to spend an hour and one-half reading "The Supreme Court Crisis" by Merlo J. Pusey and then for the remainder of our time retire to a swimming pool. Indeed, it is possible to get more real intellectual meat out of reading the Pusey book than could be obtained through attendance on the Senate debate for the entire first five days.

* * * *

MR. PUSEY gives us in his comparatively brief book a calm, dispassionate discussion, free from partisan bitterness and personal jealousies, of the issue projected when President Roosevelt last February dropped, like a bomb, on Congress and the country, his plan for reorganizing the Federal judiciary and particularly the Supreme Court. Mr. Pusey, in the writing of this book, has brought into play the keen-eyed, clear analysis, objective thinking and lucid writing with which the readers of The Washington Post are familiar daily in his work on this newspaper's editorial page.

Mr. Pusey is not sympathetic with the President's judiciary plan. He has written in essence what might be titled "The Case Against Supreme Court Reorganization by Legislative Fiat." But he has not pursued a one-sided method. His technique is to set forth the reasons given by the President why his plan should be adopted. The author then proceeds to examine those reasons, one by one, realistically and in the light of undisputed facts and known history. Thus he provides a basis from which the reader may draw his own conclusions, either agreeing with the Pusey conclusions or rejecting them as unconvincing in face of the President's reasons.

And let is be said that the author makes a strong case against the President's plan. All of his observations are directed at the original Supreme Court reorganization bill. The substitute now pending before the Senate was not revealed until after the book went to press. But fundamentally there is no difference—except that of degree—between the original bill and the pending substitute, so that the Pusey observations and conclusions validly apply to the measure now before the Senate.

MR. PUSEY, however, is not an adherent of the status quo. He does not contend that the existing situation is an admirable one and that nothing more should be done to improve harmony between the Supreme Court and the other two branches of the Federal Government. Indeed, he expresses sympathy with many of the President's objectives and with the problem confronting him—a problem which he describes as "one of national growth outrunning national power." But he holds that the solution of that problem is not to be found in packing the Supreme Court with New Deal adherents. Such is not the democratic way in his view, especially since the President carefully concealed his purpose from the voters last fall. The author is not willing "to confuse desirable ends with dictatorial means."

The American way, the democratic way of meeting this problem, he contends, is to submit to the people a proposed amendment to the Constitution, having as its purpose the bringing of the Supreme Court and judicial power into closer harmony with the needs of the times. Thus, since the President turned his back on the democratic method of solving the problem, Mr. Pusey insists that reduced to its basic elements, the present dramatic struggle for power is not between the President and the court, but between the President and the people."

"Of course," the author asserts, "the court would suffer severely from the destruction of its independent status. But after all the court is but a judicial servant of the people. The contingency which is most feared is loss of the people's right to pass judgment upon major changes in their charter of liberties."

A little further on, Mr. Pusey contends that "the drift toward authoritarian rule in many countries makes it imperative that the President's proposal be considered from this viewpoint."

"If continued self-government is our goal," he adds, "we certainly cannot afford to compromise with fascistic methods to gain immediate objectives. For it is self-evident that democracy cannot be made effective by departing from its cardinal principles."

And in reaching this conclusion he cites a quotation from the respected and venerable Justice Louis D. Brandeis, as follows:

"Experience should teach us to be most on guard to protect liberty when purposes of government are beneficent. Men born to freedom are naturally alert to repel invasion of their liberty by evil-minded persons. The greatest dangers to liberty lurk in insidious encroachment by men of zeal, well-meaning, but without understanding."

* * * *

MR. PUSEY points out that the original reasons cited by Mr. Roosevelt in behalf of his court plan, namely, docket congestion and delays in justice, inferentially caused by aged justices and judges, have long since been exploded. With care he recites history to demonstrate that there is no precedent for the course proposed by the President. He shows that adoption of the plan would not prove a remedy for any of the evils charged against the Supreme Court.

In summary Mr. Pusey asserts that "the idea of 'cracking down' upon the court for its honest independence finds no support in our history, our philosophy of government or our sense of sportsmanship" and that "particularly distasteful is the fact that the court packing plan was conceived in distrust of the people." He points out that "when the President had an opportunity to ascertain the wishes of the voters he concealed his real motives and even when his plan was laid before Congress its truly revolutionary nature was disguised by a cloak of judicial reform."

The Twain Shall Meet

"THIS SOLID FLESH," by Bradford Smith. (Bobbs-Merrill, $2.50.)

Commencing with the natal time of the new Japan, when the feudal world, grown as customary as the sun, had to be discarded, Mr. Smith's second novel deals with the dramatic fusion and conflict of the East and the West. The lives of three generations of women reveal poignantly the thoughts and emotions as well as the social structure of the changing Japan. As a young girl, Yuki married and fell in love with her husband. After their union was tragically cut short, she married again, a coldly arranged marriage which remained cold. Fortunately her only son, Masao, whom she regarded as the issue of her first marriage, provided for her all the comfort and emotional necessity. However, as Masao grows up, there rises a gap between the mother and the son because they belong to the two widely separated worlds.

Both Masao and Margaret are types. Masao's admiration of the material civilization of the West is unbounded and he desires to make that West a part of him. To marry an American girl is to carry to his native land the constant reminder of that glamorous country. Furthermore, his children, who naturally belong to the two worlds, need not struggle so hard as he did to learn the West.

Margaret, on the other hand, has no particular admiration for the Orient, but so far no attractive American youth seemed to want her company and when Masao comes is touched by his thoughtfulness and gentle manners. Above all, they are deeply in love with each other. But she is a little ashamed of him, and so is he of her: "Between themselves, they felt no hindrance, nor bar to their love. Only when they thought of each other in relation to the outside world the problem arose."

That outside world confronts them first in the character of Yuki, who resents her son's staining Japanese blood with a foreign strain. She considers Margaret vulgar because of her exhibition of affection and because she holds a physical attraction for her husband. She is disappointed because Margaret failed to give the family a son. Margaret, on the other hand, cannot obtain any satisfactory answer to any of her questions.

The conflict between the two cultures, however, is more intensified when we come to the problem of their daughter, Ruth, whose Japanese name is Haruko. She grew up in two traditions. Her father has made many compromises, believing that she will be Japanese; her mother has resigned herself, believing what she failed to accomplish her daughter will. Ruth is always torn between these two currents, and her struggle and grief rend Margaret's heart, for she is responsible for them. She had a choice, while Ruth had none, but the problems of inter-racial marriage fall on her with their full force.

"This Solid Flesh" is a significant novel dealing with the critical years in modern Japanese history. Civil wars, the restoration of the imperial rule, wars in China and Manchuria, the great European war, the earthquake of 1923 and the Manchurian crisis—all these and many more important events are in the make-up of Mr Smith's characters, but to produce right impressions and understandings, he does not editorialize, he does not even describe. With a few well chosen words and phrases and the arrangement of details he produces the necessary effects and indicates the changes that are taking place. Mr. Smith's men and women, on the other hand, fail to convince. To those who know a little about the East, they are types rather than individuals, and let us hope his future work will add subtlety and sharper delineation of his characters to his sensitive appreciation and keen understanding of the life of the East, which he has shown in his two novels

Two Madrillon Stars Complete Vacation Trips

By Chanticleer

Some people are just leaving for their vacations and others are still planning theirs, but over at the Madrillon Restaurant, two of the working people have finished with their vacations and are ready for work. We refer to Helen Shaw, little and pretty songstress, and Alvin Spieldock, drummer of the band.

No one knows and no one ever will know where Al spent his leave . . . he doesn't like to talk about it. Wonder if he did any fishing down around Baltimore's portion of the Chesapeake Bay? However, the Madrillonians needed two tom-tom beaters to sub for Al . . . and as for Helen . . . there was no substitute who could adequately fill her shoes.

Here is an old favorite in dance teams come back to Washington . . . Lucille and Linden . . . if they are as good as they used to be (which I dare say they are) they should please the audience that takes a trip out to the cool Boulevard Farms to see them perform. There usually are others in the shows at the Farms, but this week the additions to the show will be as a surprise.

Folks . . . those of you who have not as yet seen . . . you are missing half your life . . . and if you haven't heard . . . you are missing the other half . . . pardon this stammering . . . but it's about the newcomer to the Mayfair . . . she is just about as cheerful an eyeful as has hit these parts in many a moon . . . in fact, dear readers, let's go the limit and say she is strictly "tops" in her line of entertainment. In addition to all the above the little lady, Beverly Stull, plays the kind of music with her accordion that makes you think of blue-black skies, countless millions of stars, the moon is high, etc., etc.

The Broadmoor Silver Grill has recently opened the terrace for the summer months, and nightly many diners may be noted who have an eye for the beauty of nearby Rock Creek Park; and an ear for the organ melodies which come from the Hammond console at the command of Lee Potter's nimble fingers.

During the recent siege of hot weather Jimmie Crandall, the host of Brinkleys (you must know that this spot is located at 533 Eighth street southeast) ordered Carl Gunther and his boys to tone down a bit on the hot music which the aggregation had been dealing up for the pleasure of the dancing customers. Now, however, it becomes apparent that hot music is once again back in its proper place at Brinkleys, heat wave or no heat wave, for so strongly did the customers demand the revival of their popular hot numbers that Jimmie is now trying out two new and enormous electric fans as a means of cooling the brows of the fervid and feverish dancers.

Ellsworth Nightingale, of Club Nightingale, which is located 3 miles out of Alexandria on the Richmond highway, announces that the new band, Moods in Blue, is the best of the best. Watson Powell, who leads the orchestra, is a local favorite. One of the good points of dancing here is the spacious dance floor, and the chicken dinners are grand.

When people have what it takes, their abilities are usually rewarded in just manner. Such is the case of Ward DuVall, the gypsy minstrel of WJSV, who sings nightly in the King Cole Room at the Claridge Hotel. In recognition of his abilities the management has billed him over for another month. Ward, by the way, recently sang over a coast-to-coast hookup for C. B. S. In addition, Joan English continues to delight the patrons with her rendition of hit tunes.

"Russ" Conn, manager of the Ambassador Hotel, which houses the Hi Hat, that well known air conditioned rendezvous, announces that beginning Monday, only 5-year-old bonded whisky will be used as bar whisky. Mint juleps are the most popular beverage these days.

The Shoreham's Cabana Club will have a full-fledged membership even before it officially opens. Scores already have the idea of cooling and sunning themselves at the same time in those green and orange striped chairs by the Venetian pool. This takes place any time during the day before the Shoreham opens at night.

On the terrace, Rose Blanche and Webster Elliott are doing a modern American ballet this week. The Texas Rockets have been held over to do a new chorus routine.

Imagine having a drink on the roof of one of the largest hotels in Washington, shaded from the hot sun by a huge, gay canopy . . . not only in the face of any small breeze there may be, but have this breeze trained upon you through the steady patter of water . . . that's what they've done at the Roof Deck . . . the Washington Hotel contribution to the comfortably cool places to sit and sip.

Here is a special note to all government employes who would like to take advantage of the Wardman Park Hotel's offer to enter their Amateur Talent Contest. This contest is open to all employes of Uncle Sam, and the first audition will be held tomorrow night in the Metronome Room from 8 to 10 o'clock. The winner will be given a week's contract, beginning the following Monday, at the Wardman Park. The auditions will continue for the following three Thursdays. The four winners will compete for an all-expense paid trip to New York.

The Lotus Restaurant was one of the first dine and dance places to install an air-cooling and conditioning plant. Now, after four years, this large air-cooling plant is even more popular than when it was first installed. There is never a dull moment, for the Lotus is continuing its policy of bringing in complete Broadway Revues each week. These revues are presented three times daily, at 1 p. m.; at 7:30 p. m.; and 11:30 p. m. There is dancing to Bill Strickland's Capitolian orchestra.

This week the features are James and Joan Richards in a Personality Strut and an unusual Hurdle dance. "Lazy" Bill Huggins is warbling songs . . . Hilda Elfonte is featured in an acrobatic and also in an exotic number. Arden and Renard are exponents of the modern dance.

The Boys and Girls Posed for This

Tax Lien for $23,711 Filed Against Schmeling

New York, July 13 (AP).—The Internal Revenue Bureau today filed a tax lien for $23,711.55 against Max Schmeling, German heavyweight fighter. The lien covers an assessment for 1932 and 1933. Last year another lien for $40,000 was filed against Schmeling.

Watermelons Held Up.

The Agriculture Department announced yesterday a second 48-hour halt in shipment of watermelons from Southeastern States had been ordered effective 12:01 a. m. Thursday. Shipments from Florida, Georgia and the Carolinas will be halted under the Federal marketing program in those States. Officials said the restriction was aimed at relieving glutted watermelon markets.

St. Gabriel's Carnival To Close on Saturday

Attracting large crowds nightly, the eighteenth annual carnival of St. Gabriel's Church is now in its second week and will terminate Saturday night.

It is estimated by the committee in charge of the affair that more than 10,000 persons thus far have visited the carnival grounds at Grant Circle northwest.

Thirty-seven stands and two amusement rides are in operation each night, while another nightly feature is a concert by the Elks Boys Band.

Commissioners Name Mrs. King To Welfare Post

Prominent Social Worker Appointed to Succeed Mrs. Goldsmith.

Mrs. Louise Berliner King, Washington social worker, was appointed by the Commissioners yesterday as a member of the Board of Public Welfare.

She succeeds Mrs. Charles Goldsmith, who resigned July 1 after serving since the board was established in 1926. Mrs. Goldsmith told the Commissioners she planned to be away from Washington during the coming year.

Mrs. King is the daughter of the late Emile Berliner, who was a member of the old Board of Charities from 1914 to 1916. She is the wife of Milton King, local attorney. They live in the Westchester Apartments.

A native of Washington, Mrs. King has a long record of volunteer service for the District. She is treasurer of Friendship House, a member of the Board of Southeast Community House, a member of the Board of the Jewish Social Service Agency, a member of the Society for the Prevention of Blindness and of the Washington Institute for Mental Hygiene.

In addition, Mrs. King holds membership on the board members' council of the Washington Council of Social Agencies and the budget committee of the Community Chest.

Her present term on the Board of Public Welfare will expire July 1, 1938.

Legion Served Only Punch.

The Post stated incorrectly yesterday that beer as well as punch was served the disabled veterans during their Potomac excursion Monday. The American Legion, which sponsored the outing, reports punch was the only beverage served.

On the Air Today

The George Washington University, through its president, Dr. Cloyd H. Marvin, has invited a group of local radio authorities and newspapermen to meet with him at the university this morning, when the assembled gentlemen will discuss the development of a Radio Workshop and School of the Air in the university.

A glance through the files of the now existing radio stations of this country indicates that there are thirty odd licenses issued by the Federal Communications Commission to educational institutions for the maintenance and operation of broadcasting stations. Several of these are issued to high schools, and the predominance of the Midwestern colleges and universities in this field is a peculiar factor.

One would think that radio broadcasting with its many attractive offers to personnel would lure many college graduates, and especially in the vicinity of New York, where radio has its focal point. But this is not the case. Our best radio engineers, announcers, staff artists, etc., are products of the Midwestern States.

Hence, the move on the part of the George Washington University, whose interest in radio had its inception many years ago with the advent of the Radio Forum and then later with the Radio Players, is a highly commendable enterprise. The City of Washington has always offered to local talent the opportunity to "break" into radio, and now, if the plans of the university are successful, local, as well as out-of-town students will have the opportunity for a radio education.

The scheduled production of "King Lear" as the third in the Columbia Broadcasting System's weekly cycle of eight Shakespeare plays has been postponed because of the illness of Lionel Barrymore, who had been signed to play the leading role. Columbia has set "King Lear" production date for August 9 against the possibility that Barrymore might be able to go ahead with the broadcast at that time. Lionel suffers from an old injury. "Julius Ceasar" is to be presented in the place of "King Lear" on Monday, July 26, with a brilliant cast that will include Claude Rains as Cassius.

The revised schedule for Columbia's cycle, which began last Monday with "Hamlet," follows: July 19, "Much Ado About Nothing," starring Leslie Howard; July 26, "Julius Caesar;" August 2, "The Taming of the Shrew," with Edward G. Robinson as Petruchio; August 9, "King Lear;" August 16, "As You Like It," with Frank Morgan as Jacques; August 23, "Henry IV," starring Walter Huston, Humphrey Bogart, Brain Amerne and Walter Connolly; August 30, "Twelfth Night," with Sir Cedric Hardwicke, Helen Menken and Tallulah Bankhead.

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt's final program of her 1937 series over WMAL will be broadcast at 6:15 p. m. In this concluding broadcast Hendrik Willem Van Loon will join Mrs. Roosevelt in reviewing outstanding events and personalities of the past year. Mrs. Roosevelt's contract with the sponsors of the series called for 13 weekly broadcasts. The first was on April 21. In accordance with the terms of the contract, the sponsors send weekly checks to the American Friends Service Committee, Philadelphia, Mrs. Roosevelt receiving no compensation for her services.

Other features:

1:30 p. m., WMAL—The Consumers' program presents Mrs. Josephine Junkin Doggett and Mr. Morse Salisbury, speaking on "A Cob of Corn Facts."

2:45 p. m., WJSV—The music of Matthew Lock, famous Elizabethan composer, written for Shakespeare's play, "The Tempest," will be played by Bernard Herrman and his Columbia Concert Hall Orchestra.

3:00 p. m., WJSV—The Washington-Cleveland baseball game brought to you by Arch McDonald.

5:45 p. m., WJSV—Maj. Gen. Smedley D. Butler will speak on "Avoiding War in the Pacific."

7 p. m., WRC—Paul Barbour, of One Man's Family, is shown in a new light in this evening's episode.

8 p. m., WOL—"Murder With Music" will be dramatized by the cast of "Thrilling Detective Dramas." The story is about the strange murder of Dr. Sigmund Speher, who came to the United States to conduct a symphony concert.

8 p. m., WRC—Beatrice Kay, Tex Lewis and his Wranglers, Hal Gordon and Casper Reardon will be the guests of Walter O'Keefe during his Town Hall Tonight. Miss Kay impersonates torch singers, Lewis heads a group of cowboy vocalists, Gordon is a tenor and Casper swings on his harp.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

Girl Wonders If She Should Marry Widower Whose First Marriage Had Tragic Denouement.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am 20 years old and I went with a boy of 23 for a year and a half. He wanted me to marry him, but I wasn't sure I loved him so I stopped going with him. Two weeks later he married another girl whom I knew very well. After a few months both of them started going out with other persons, and I went about with him. Then, later, he went back to his wife again, and they seemed to be fairly happy.

* * * *

They were married two years when his wife took her life, without giving any explanation for so doing. He has a good job and had given her everything she ever wanted. His wife has been dead a short time and now he calls me constantly, wanting me to go out with him.

* * * *

Do you think I should go out with him? He advances the argument that he is still young and that he cannot become a recluse for the rest of his life as a result of his wife's tragic death. He says he loves me and shows it in every way. My parents do not approve of the association and I would appreciate any advice you may offer. UNCERTAIN.

Whom to Consult.

DEAR UNCERTAIN: It is my opinion that no layman should presume to venture arbitrary advice or opinions in a problem so grave as this one. It is my suggestion, only, that you and the young man—if you are firmly convinced that there is a well-authenticated devotion between you—go together to a psychiatrist or perhaps a clergyman (someone who is deeply versed in problems of human behavior and their far-reaching, underlying implications) and present in detail the whole history of your association, from the beginning of your boy-and-girl courtship through his marriage, with its tragic denouement, up to the present day.

* * * *

After hearing the whole story such a person will be better equipped to say whether or not the young man could make any woman a good husband. M. H.

Asks Clean-Up Advice.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: My husband and I have sublet an apartment, entirely furnished, for two months, beginning July 15, from a gentleman who has been living there alone. It consists of kitchen, bath and studio living room. This apartment seems to be clean enough in appearance, but I am eager that it shall be as nearly germ-free as possible. Can you advise a method of cleaning the apartment and the name of materials I might use so that the place will be as clean as possible? Your suggestions will be much appreciated. Very truly yours. FASTIDIOUS.

* * * *

DEAR FASTIDIOUS: You need the advice of a specialist here. Many substances which might be altogether effective from a germicidal point of view might nevertheless prove partially or totally injurious to the interior finish and furnishings of the apartment. I suggest you take your problem to the head of the home furnishings department of a reputable department store. M. H.

Tip to Shopkeepers.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: May I add my 2 cents' worth to the current discussion of Washington stores and salespersons? My problem has been the very evident reluctance of shoe salesmen to wait on me, an elderly person, when there are more attractive young ladies in view—even though, by priority of arrival, I was rightfully entitled to their attention.

* * * *

I am not an aggressive person and have much sympathy for salesmen and saleswomen. But I have been treated so rudely when and if I bespoke my right to attention that only the fear that I might have caused the offender to lose his job has kept me from reporting him to the management.

Needless to say, when I found a store (as I did, eventually) where the fact that I was elderly brought me most courteous attention, I promptly adopted it and have since given it all my trade and have consistently recommended it to all my friends. The moral of my testimony, I suppose, is that courteous, considerate treatment of customers is a store's best advertisement. Sincerely, COLUMN READER.

"Haughty Salespersons."

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I can go "Customer" one better in my appraisal of Washington shops' haughty salespersons. She appraised their attitude as being that of "I'm only here because my family lost its millions." It's pretty plain to me that most of them not only never had any millions, but all too little careful upbringing. The mystery is—where did they get their exalted opinion of themselves? I have found the majority of them to be supercilious, conceited and oh, so lazy!

* * * *

They greet you with that critical "up-and-down" look and, so it seems to me, thereafter extend themselves to show how very disinterested they are both in yourself and your wants. As a rule, you buy simply because you are desperately in need of a certain commodity; not because of any sales persuasion; and the net result is that your costume usually looks like something assembled out of a grab bag! At least, that's my impression of myself at times, and I console myself with the thought that it's not entirely my fault. DEJECTED SHOPPER.

Add 1 pound hamburg steak and 1 tablespoon chopped green pepper and stir until steak is cooked; add ½ cup celery cut in strips 2 inches long, then add to the macaroni with ½ teaspoon Worcestershire sauce, 1 tablespoon chopped parsley, ½ teaspoon poultry seasoning and salt and pepper to taste. Simmer gently for 10 minutes.

Miss Mary Pentland, of Portland, Is Cited for Achievement.

By Malvina Lindsay.

"WHAT women in business need is more charm."

The speaker was Miss Mary Pentland, attractive young advertising woman of Portland, Oreg., who had just arrived from New York where she had been presented the Josephine Snapp award for the most outstanding achievement in advertising by a woman in the United States in the last year.

"More charm!" gasped the interviewer, visioning more night vigils of cold-creaming, more noon hours spent in hectic search for "smart" little office dresses, more perfume, more smirking——

"Yes, charm," calmly continued Miss Pentland. "But, of course, by charm I do not mean being devastating to men or developing a surface glamour. I mean being a gracious, interesting and stimulating person to all with whom you come in contact, whether men or women. I mean the personality development that results from a growing mind, an adjusted life and an inner vision."

Need Wide Interests.

Here was a prescription offered by a "doctor" who in herself was most convincing. As recipient of the Josephine Snapp award, given this year for the first time by the Woman's Advertising Club of Chicago in honor of a former member, Miss Pentland's work had been chosen among entries submitted by women's advertising clubs from all the larger cities of the country. Moreover, personally, she bore testimony to her own theory. In her unlined face, her serene blue eyes, there was no hint of the strain and anxiety frequent in the countenance of the average businesswoman. Yet there had been years of struggle behind her climb to her present position as head of her own agency.

"I had a dreadfully hard time when I first entered the advertising field," she said, "and the thing that helped me most was seeking to develop some inner source of strength and inspiration. I found then what I believe to be the secret of any woman's business success—that she have something bigger in her life than her job."

The biggest problem facing business women today, Miss Pentland believes, is not that of getting their "rights" from men, or even attaining technical proficiency or bigger salaries. It is rather that of broadening their base of living, of making the social adjustment to life that men have.

Men Better Adjusted.

"Men in business" she said, "have one advantage over women in that they are usually living many-sided lives. As a rule a man has his family life, his social life, his sports and hobbies in addition to his job. This broadened basis of living reflects in his work.

"The reason so many women in business lack charm is that they have either let their jobs become too big a part of their lives or that they have failed to adjust to them and feel frustrated in what they are doing. Take almost any group of business women and you will sense that not more than 25 per cent of them are living complete lives. Some have let their jobs overpower everything else in their lives. Others have gone off at tangents and are fighting men or indulging in petty jealousies among themselves. They have not created for themselves the emotional outlets they need, whether through human relationships, children, art, music or other creative pursuits or through the giving of themselves in philanthropic undertakings. What all business women need is to get their minds off themselves, broaden their viewpoints, live more objectively.

Underwood & Underwood.

"Get an interest bigger than your job" is the success formula given business women by Miss Mary Pentland, of Portland, Oreg., who has been cited for outstanding achievement in the field of advertising.

"Vision" Is Charm.

"I think the greatest danger all of us in business face is that of letting our minds narrow. No woman ever gets further than her vision. The minute her vision begins to narrow, she narrows herself."

This "vision," Miss Pentland believes is one of the main pillars of charm in woman. It is the thing that makes a woman "gracious and generous under all conditions." And it is the outstanding quality she has observed in business women who have reached the top.

"Almost without exception" she said, "the outstanding business women are women of charm. They have been able to get their minds off themselves and get interested in the world about them. They have been able to adapt themselves to changing conditions and standards instead of fighting them. And unlike the second raters, they are singularly free from jealousy, suspicion and backbiting."

Miss Pentland, of course, would not exempt clothes entirely from her charm formula. "There's no excuse for being frumpy" she said, "but a frumpy mind is harder to endure than a frumpy wardrobe. Every woman owes it to herself to go to a big mirror several times a day and see what she looks like. But it's even more important for her to stop and take stock of her mind.

Personality Above Style.

"Recently I attended a dinner in honor of one of the foremost business woman of the day. Here was a woman who had made an outstanding success under difficulties. Her figure was nothing to speak of, her hair was dressed in an old-fashioned style. Her clothes, though neat, were of the type that indicated she had entered the business world in the 'leg-o-mutton sleeve' days. But the minute she began to talk I was drawn to her. I knew she was a fine person, a magnetic person, a happy person. I knew she was socially adjusted to life and that if she had not been, she would have had sense enough to have done something about it. Here was a woman who had true and enduring charm."

While in Washington Miss Pentland will confer with leaders of the women's division of the Democratic National Committee. During the recent Presidential campaign she had charge of the dramatized radio program "Forward America," which was presented by the Young Democrats' Clubs of Oregon.

A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes

New York, July 13.

AGAIN we have been playing host for a few minutes to one of America's outstanding women, Miss Sally Rand, and I speak with no irony at all. Sally has put away her fans, her big soap bubbles and her art of revealment for the season, and has become for the summer what she really is, and wants to be, a dramatic actress. 'Twas only a year ago that Sally gave a remarkable performance as Sadie Thompson in "Rain." This year, at Ogunquit, Me., the famous fan dancer is going to play the showy, Pauline Lord starring part in "They Knew What They Wanted." And the visitors to the popular Maine resort will no doubt find it well worth while.

ALICE HUGHES.

This Rand girl has far more than a display of epidermis for the public. She is smart. She is what the world of entertainment calls "a good showman," which is the highest praise it can bestow. For over three years she waved her fans strategically. She did not originate the so-called fan dance—which pioneer work was really done by Miss Faith Bacon in the Earl Carroll show nearly 10 years ago. But it was Sally's startling appearance on the Midway and in police court which did much to attract attention to the Chicago Century of Progress in 1933 and '34. After that, wiseacres said she was through as a public attraction, but Sally fooled them again by taking her company of 47 thoroughly covered little girls on tour last year, at a high profit.

* * * *

Now I have seen Sally off to her summer triumph in the legitimate drama. And Grover Whalen, head of our World's Fair scheduled for 1939, says that our show will not call on Sally Rand or a modernized version to attract wide public attention to our big show in the Flushing Meadows. Sally and I sort of resent this implied sneer, Grover. I hope you are being smart about the enormous exhibition to which you hope to attract many millions of people. I hope you may get a big drawing card as clever and as morally harmless as la belle Rand.

* * * *

A fashion ghost out of the past popped up at the Marguery at lunch today. Mme. Frances, whose name used to be to clothes what Tiffany's is today to diamonds. Creations she made for New York's big spenders in the day when champagne out of a slipper tasted better than drinking it from a glass! The money she charged, for her fanciful creations! The gay parties that took place in her atelier, when Travis Banton, who now designs for the movies, was just another of her designers! Today Mme. Frances is a modest figure, not noticeable in a crowd. She could sport clothes and jewels if she wanted to, for she sold her name for a fortune before she shook the bastings and pins out of her clothes. But not she! She's too smart. She travels, lives well, has a lot of fun.

GIRL ABOUT TOWN:

Lysbeth, who counsels the Selznick movie producers in Hollywood as to clothes and such, is in New York looking over fabrics for the costumes of "Gone With the Wind." She says that Southerners from all over Georgia are sending in balustrades, furniture, costumes and other material dating back to the Civil war, in the hope that they will be used (and paid for) in the picture . . . Dorothea Lawrence, a lark from the local concert stage, finds that talking rehearses her voice as much as does singing. Any day she has a good chit-chat with a friend, she checks it off rehearsal time.

This has us puzzled: A man has just been arrested for chiseling the bronze letters off signs, and reselling them. He stole only consonants. Why not vowels?

TODAY'S HEALTH TALK

Mental Disorders.

Last week I saw the desk on which Jonathan Swift wrote "Gulliver's Travels." It is in Dublin, housed in the hospital which Swift founded, and to which he gave all his wealth when he died.

He wanted to found a hospital for the treatment of mental diseases because he was impressed with the inhuman way the insane were handled in his day. Ironically, his own mind gave way and he was an inmate, and, I think, died in the hospital he founded.

The superintendent of Swift's, Dr. Richard Leeper, showed me over the hospital, which still is in use for mental patients. Indeed, it is the best, most modern and best equipped hospital of its kind in Ireland. Dr. Leeper is a great Swift enthusiast, and has made a wonderful collection of relics of the stormy dean of St. Patrick's. He has also made a collection of the instruments used in the care of insane patients in the old days. I saw the chairs and rings which were used to bind their legs. Patients were chained to the wall of a dungeon often for months. Another device used to quiet them was to put them in a revolving chair and spin them around until they were dizzy and vomited. The poor things! One of the brightest spots in the annals of medicine is the modern humane treatment of these unfortunates.

In Swift's hospital today you are taken to comfortable, well furnished rooms. They are made to look homelike: there is no suggestion of restraint or the atmosphere of a cell. These rooms lead into large sitting rooms where the patients may congregate and talk, or play games together. Outside are pretty gardens where they may walk at will, and which give no impression of an institution.

If a patient is disturbed he is quieted by gentle means—one of which is a prolonged stay in a hot bath. This has been found to be a very effectual method of calming people who are delirious or maniacal.

All methods of treatment have a place in such an institution—there are rooms for massage, and for electrical treatments by diathermy applied to sore joints or muscles. Also apparatus for inducing artificial fever, which is playing such an increasingly large part in the treatment of these maladies.

Mental or psychological treatment of all kinds is used. The methods of Freud are being accorded less and less prominence, if my observations can be depended upon. But such psychological relief as comes from occupational treatment form a department in this institution. There is great mental calm in learning to weave a basket or paint a picture. And an innovation I have never seen in a hospital of this kind, I saw in Dublin—they have installed a moving-picture theater and give shows three nights a week.

EDITOR'S NOTE: Seven pamphlets by Dr. Clendening can now be obtained by sending 10 cents in coin, for each, and a self-addressed envelope stamped with a 3-cent stamp, to Dr. Logan Clendening, in care of this paper. The pamphlets are "Three Weeks' Reducing Diet," "Indigestion and Constipation," "Reducing and Gaining," "Infant Feeding," "Instructions for the Treatment of Diabetes," "Feminine Hygiene" and "The Care of the Hair and Skin."

Recipe Contest.

If you have an interesting recipe for a vegetable dish, enter it in The Post recipe contest for this week.

The cash awards for this contest are $3 for first prize, $2 for second prize and $1 for each of the three additional prizes. Any vegetable dish recipe is eligible.

Simply copy your recipe neatly and send it to Rebekah Blake, The Post food editor, so she will receive it not later than Saturday noon. Send your name and address, clearly written, with your recipe.

Only one recipe will be accepted from each contestant.

First Prize in Contest Goes To Tomato Cheese Sandwiches

By Rebekah Blake.

SUCCULANT sandwiches are one of the summer's most popular foods, and new and different fillings for these bits of food make them even more interesting and appetizing.

The Post recipe contest for sandwiches brought in recipes for substantial club sandwiches and broiled sandwiches and dainty pinwheel sandwiches. There were also recipes submitted for cheese and olive sandwiches, ham and chicken, jellied sandwiches, nut sandwiches, vegetable salad, and marshmallow and banana sandwich fillings.

Mrs. J. Balch Moor, Kenesaw Apartments, received the first prize, $3, for her recipe for tomato cheese sandwiches.

Mrs. Jay Lawlor, 1627 Thirty-fifth street, won the second prize, $2, for her recipe for nut jelly sandwiches. Miss Sylvia Klein, of the Procurement Division, Ninth and D streets Southwest, won the third prize, $1, for her recipe for eggplant and tomato sandwiches, and Miss Martha Ryan, 1629 Thirty-fifth street, won the fourth prize, also $1, for her recipe for Irish rolled sandwiches. Alice D. Hewitt, 1117 Vermont avenue northwest, won the fifth prize, $1, for her recipe for cream almond sandwiches.

Here is Mrs. Moor's recipe:

Tomato Cheese Sandwiches.

1 No. 2 can tomatoes
½ pound American cheese
2 eggs
1 tablespoon butter
1 tablespoon flour
1 teaspoon minced onion or piece grated onion
Dash of red pepper

Place the juice on the stove. When it begins to get hot, add grated cheese and stir until it melts.

Have eggs beaten with the flour. Pour cheese mixture on this, stirring constantly—then return to stove and cook until consistency of thick custard. Remove from heat, add butter and seasonings.

Put in refrigerator to get cold before using. Will keep for several days.

Mrs. Lawlor's recipe:

Nut Jelly Sandwiches.

1 box gelatin
1 cup cold water
1 cup hot water
1 cup sugar
½ cups claret
¼ cup lemon juice
1 cup whipping cream
½ cup English walnuts and almonds
1 sponge cake, large

Soak the gelatin in cold water and dissolve in hot. Add sugar and strain. When cold add claret and lemon juice. Mold in sheets ⅜ inch deep in a wet pan.

Slice nuts very thin and stir into stiffly whipped cream. From thin slices of sponge cake cut fancy shapes. With same cutters stamp out jelly shapes. Spread cakes with cream and nuts and cover with jelly shapes.

Eggplant-Tomato Sandwich.

1 eggplant
Butter
Tomatoes
Broiled bacon
Grated American cheese

Cut eggplant in half-inch slices, peel. Sprinkle each slice with salt, pile up and cover with a weight for half-hour. Rinse, dry, dip on both sides in fine crumbs. Fry in butter. peel. Sprinkle each slice with salt, slice of tomato on a slice of eggplant, cover with a strip of broiled bacon, then with another slice of eggplant. Sprinkle generously with grated cheese. Place in moderate oven, 350 Fahrenheit, until cheese is melted. Serve hot.

Miss Ryan's recipe:

Irish Rolled Sandwiches.

Trim crusts off a sandwich loaf; slice thin lengthwise. Place on a damp cloth when ready to spread. Spread with a paste made of butter, mashed canned artichoke hearts and chopped parsley, mixed with mayonnaise, salt, paprika and a dash of grated American cheese. Roll up the slice, making the first bend rather sharp and pressing the bread at each twist. Seat the edge of the roll with butter and wrap in wax paper. Put in refrigerator until ready to serve, then slice crosswise.

Miss Hewitt's recipe:

Cream Almond Sandwich.

1½ packages cream cheese
1 tablespoon lemon juice
½ cup chopped salted almonds
⅛ cup finely chopped dates
1 loaf Boston brown bread, sliced thin

Blend cream cheese and thoroughly mix the lemon juice to spreading consistency. Add chopped almond and dates. Spread between buttered slices of brown bread. Makes about 18 to 20 small sandwiches.

By Alice Brooks.

BETTER than a picnic is the fun you'll have embroidering tea towels with these gayer than gay motifs—luscious cross stitched fruits and homey everyday kitchenware. Do the dishes in outline stitch or applique as you choose. The patch is a simple one to handle and adds a splash of color. It's a novel idea to have a set of these ready to offer at your State Fair in the fall. In pattern 5891 you will find a transfer pattern of six motifs averaging 5¼x6½ inches; material requirements; color suggestions; illustrations of all stitches used.

To obtain this pattern send 10 cents in stamps or coin (coin preferred) to The Washington Post, Household Arts Department, 259 West Fourteenth Street, New York, N. Y.

French Embassy Quiet On 148th Bastille Day

By Hope Ridings Miller,
The Post Society Editor.

Liberty-loving French hearts around the world today will beat faster in recalling that 148 years ago a courageous band stormed the Bastille and sounded the battle cry of freedom from Bourbon oppression.

Bastille Day—the French "Fourth of July"—has meant many things to Washington in past years. The French Embassy, in its Sixteenth street days, on July 14, was generally the scene of spirited informal gatherings at which sparkling champagne and gay talk flowed freely and members of the embassy staff and their compatriots recalled thrilling Bastille Day celebrations in which they had participated "back home."

Last year, blood-curdling accounts of fighting in the streets of Paris, following a Popular Front demonstration July 14, came across the water to the French Embassy on Kalorama road. There were reports that "On to the Bastille!"—the cry of the French revolutionists in 1789—was echoed by their descendants in the shout of "Long live the Popular Front!"

But the Embassy here was quiet on that day. The staff, for the most part away from Washington for the summer, had no special Bastille Day celebration. Nor will they have today.

Embassy Staff in Process of Change.

Mme. Bonnet and small, golden-haired Alain are sailing today on the Normandie to join the Ambassador—who is also Minister of Finance in the new French cabinet in Paris. Jules Henry, Minister-Counselor of the Embassy, is in New York to see them off, and also to say good-by to the Assistant Air Attache of the Embassy, Capt. Georges Fayet, and Mme. Fayet, who also are sailing on the Normandie and will not return.

Capt. Fayet will join the French Air Minister in Paris for a few weeks and then go on with his family to Algiers, where he will join the French air force in North Africa.

Also with their bags packed are the second secretary of the Embassy, Pierre Charpentier, and Mme. Charpentier, who will sail for France Saturday, July 24. They, too, wil lnot be back. Upon arriving in Paris, M. Charpentier will join the ambassador-minister, but plans for his next post have not yet been revealed.

But while the French Embassy is in a process of changing members of its staff and will not be the scene of a Bastille celebration today, that does not mean Washington will have no event in recognition of the historic day.

Dr. and Mrs. Benton To Observe Bastille Day.

In the cool green shades of a garden on Reservoir road more than 50 persons will gather this afternoon as guests of Dr. and Mrs. Frederick Benton, who have celebrated France's independence day for more than a generation.

For eight consecutive years in Washington the Bentons have given a party July 14. More than a decade before they came to the Capital they observed Bastille Day in this fashion, and they have continued the custom since they moved here in 1929.

Twenty-two years ago they gave their first Bastille Day party in Key West, Fla., during their honeymoon. They had not planned it as this type of entertainment, however. It happened that on the evening of July 14 they had invited a few of their friends to dinner, among them being a very close friend, Dr. George Rochefoucauld Plummer. The date happened also to be the birthday of Mrs. Benton's grandmother, who, incidentally, was a direct descendant of members of the Jewett family, who left France with William the Conqueror.

In the course of the evening somebody remembered it was Bastille Day, and it was observed that a number of persons present, including Mrs. Benton and Dr. Plummer, were of French descent. The party developed into such a memorable affair that the Bentons decided to commemorate Bastille Day each year. Hence this afternoon's garden party.

Mrs. W. T. Mann Plans Auto Trip

Daughter and Sister Will Accompany Her to Cape Cod, Mass.

Mrs. William T. Mann will leave Sunday to motor to Hyannisport, on Cape Cod, to visit her mother-in-law, Mrs. Isaac Mann. She will be accompanied by her young daughter, Nancy, and her sister, Miss Barbara Beale, who will visit Miss Elaine Darlington, subdebutante daughter of Mrs. George Angus Garrett, of Washington. Mr. and Mrs. Garrett have taken a house at Marion, Mass., for the summer. Miss Beale will later visit Miss Sita Finkenstaedt, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Finkenstaedt, of Washington, at their summer home in Wainscot, Long Island.

Mrs. Mann will remain on the Cape until early in September. Her mother, Mrs. William L. Beale, and her other sister, Miss Betty Beale, will leave the middle of next month by motor for Osterville, on Cape Cod, and after a week's stay there expect to go to Canada. They will be accompanied to the Cape by Mrs. Sims Snow.

Paul W. Clarke, Bride Taking Trip by Motor

Mr. and Mrs. Paul Wesley Clarke, who were married Monday afternoon, are on a wedding trip by motor. Mrs. Clarke is the former Nellie Edna Whirlow, daughter of Mrs. Sarah Ann Whirlow.

The bride was given in marriage by her brother, and her attendants were Miss Irene S. Raver and Miss Isabell Leisinger. John M. Kemper, jr., was best man, and the ushers were T. Leland Willis and Frank C. Rollins. The ceremony, performed by the Rev. Simpson B. Daugherty, was followed by a reception for members of the two families and friends.

Son Born to Hydes.

Mr. and Mrs. Anthony Hyde, formerly of Washington, now of Philadelphia, announce the birth of a son recently at the Pennsylvania Maternity Hospital in Philadelphia. The child will be named after his father, who is the son of Dorsey W. Hyde, jr., director of archival service of the National Archives.

Mr., Mrs. Sayre Reach England Via Freighter

Assistant Secretary of State and Bride to Motor Through Country.

The Assistant Secretary of State and Mrs. Francis B. Sayre have landed in England after a voyage across the Atlantic in a freight steamer, in which they were the only passengers. They propose to spend the next few weeks in London and motoring through the English countryside.

Before her marriage June 28 at St. Alban's Church, Mrs. Sayre was Mrs. Elizabeth Evans Graves, daughter of Mrs. William Evans, of Washington. Mr. Sayre's first wife was Jessie Wilson, daughter of President Woodrow Wilson.

Mr. and Mrs. Sayre are expected to return to Washington about August 21, and will occupy the bride's home on Rockwood Parkway in Spring Valley, a charming house with a beautiful garden and flagged terraces. After the death of her first husband, the late Ralph Graves, writer and editor, Mrs. Sayre preferred to lease it, meanwhile making her home with her mother in Foxhall Village. One of the occupants of her house was Edwin Wilson, a foreign service officer now attached to the American Embassy in Paris.

Maj. and Mrs. Vernon Evans, brother and sister-in-law of Mrs. Sayre, will leave Washington early next month for a holiday of several weeks. Mrs. Evans will visit her mother in Montclair, N. J., and Maj. Evans and their children will go to Cape Cod.

Wheelers Visit Gallery to Hear Senator Speak

Wife and Daughter Attend; Other Families Show Political Interest.

By Dudley Harmon.

In the crowd that packs the Senate gallery these hot days hoping to hear Senator Burton K. Wheeler deliver himself of a few opinions against the Supreme Court bill, there are two people, anyway, who always agree with every word he says. They are Mrs. Wheeler and her daughter, Mrs. Edwin Colman, and their attendance in the gallery recently has been almost 100 per cent.

People who meet Mrs. Wheeler for the first time often put her down as a rather quiet person. As a matter of fact, her political convictions are as strong as her famous husband's, and although she is the mother of six children, she takes an active interest in politics and has often campaigned with the gentleman from Montana.

Mrs. Colman Concerned With Political Scene.

Mrs. Colman, the former Elizabeth Wheeler, created something of a sensation last year when she picketed a pants factory. Her picketing was in the interests of the League of Women Shoppers, an organization which tries to see that employes get the right wages and decent working conditions. A graduate of George Washington University, and possessor of a master's degree, Mrs. Colman is intensely interested in things political and economic. (Incidentally, she resembles her father strikingly.) Before she started working for the Women Shoppers, she had a job with the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom. Even the addition of a husband, a house, and a small daughter haven't obliged Mrs. Colman to curtail her activities outside the home.

Other loyal wives and daughters of Senators have been packing the Senate lately for the "best show in Washington." The record for enthusiasm is probably held by Mrs. Henry Cabot Lodge, jr., who came all the way back from cool Beverly, Mass., to listen in at the Senate. "It's more interesting down here than on the North Shore," she explained.

Many Others Seen In Senate Gallery.

Others who have been haunting the gallery include Mrs. Peter Goelet Gerry, wife of the Rhode Island Senator, who goes every day; Mrs. Edward R. Burke, wife of the Senator who has been one of the most ardent in the battle against the bill; Mrs. Joseph C. O'Mahoney, Mrs. Millard Tydings, who comes in from Oakington, her country place, to "listen in;" Mrs. John Overton and Mrs. Alva Adams. Mrs. Stanley Reed, wife of the Solicitor General, and Mrs. Emil Hurja, whose husband used to be Farley's chief political prognosticator, are others in official Washington who are Senate fans.

The ladies even go without their lunch in order not to miss a single word of the debate. They go in around noon or so, dash out for a sandwich around three or four, and then return to sit until the bitter end.

Announce Birth.

Capt. H. S. Bishop, jr., Engineer Corps, U. S. A., and Mrs. Bishop, announce the birth of a daughter, Teresa Ann, at Walter Reed Hospital, on Sunday, July 11. Capt. Bishop is Assistant Engineer Commissioner of the District.

Brazil Officer Here.

Lieut. Sylvio Motta, of the Brazilian Navy, is at the Shoreham to spend two weeks. He has come from Rio de Janeiro and is on official duty.

Off for Europe.

Mr. and Mrs. Howard S. Leroy will leave July 24 on the Champlain for a trip to Europe. They will be abroad about six weeks.

Club Women Of Bethesda Stage Party

'Gay '90s' Fashion Show Also Presented at Meeting.

By Jessie Ash Arndt,
The Post Club Editor.

OLD-FASHIONED bathing girls, a bride, and even "the man on the flying trapeze" were featured yesterday afternoon at the stunt party of the Woman's Club of Bethesda. Members gathered for a picnic luncheon at noon, followed by a program including stunts and a fashion show of the "gay 90's" era. Later many remained to play bridge either in the clubhouse auditorium or on the terrace.

Mrs. Reed Bradley was in charge of the affair. Mrs. L. L. Nicholson, the president, gave a group of Chinese songs in costume. Amusing dramatic readings were presented by Mrs. Eugene Doyle, and Mrs. Peter Decker appeared as a prima donna in an elaborate gown, singing dramatic arias in equally elaborate style, with Mrs. Doree Holman as her accompanist.

Mrs. Richard Titlow "brought down the house" when she appeared as "the man on the flying trapeze"—except that she had no trapeze—and presented an acrobatic burlesque. Her costume was complete even to the long black moustache, formed of loops of embroidery silk pasted securely to her upper lip.

Mrs. Ford E. Young presented "The Old Gray Mare" as a piano solo and there was "a wild animal" act in which Mrs. E. T. Kohman, Mrs. R. B. Looker, Mrs. Edward Morrison and Mrs. F. D. Smith took part.

"Bluebeard and His Wives" was a scene of the blood-curdling sideshow variety, in which Mrs. Jacob Bulger had the role of Bluebeard. Mrs. L. E. Cassey, Mrs. Edward Garlock, Mrs. J. B. Bowen and Mrs. Clarence Stein were his ill-fated wives.

No stunt party would be complete without magic, and this was provided by Mrs. Cassey, Mrs. Harry Pirie, Mrs. Bulger, Mrs. Garlock and Mrs. N. F. Rabner. They appeared in a Houdini act in which one of the number was "miraculously" lifted into the air by the other four on the tips of their fingers.

Another amusing stunt was the Cinderella act. Mrs. Hugh Johnston, as Prince Charming, was blindfolded and given her selection of the shoes worn by Mrs. Jack Irwin, Mrs. Rabner, Mrs. J. P. DiBlasi and Mrs. Bowen. Her efforts to find the Cinderella which belonged to the slippers delighted the audience.

In the fashion parade were Mrs. Pirie, who displayed lingerie of the "elegant 80s;" Mrs. Eleanor Cronin, a charter member of the club, who was the "Little Old Lady Passing By;" Mrs. Johnston and Mrs. R. E. Ames, as old-fashioned girls; Mrs. Rabner, showing "what the well-dressed bride will not wear in 1938," and Mrs. Decker as the bathing beauty, wearing a suit of the vintage of 20 years or more ago.

Another open house will be sponsored by the club in August.

Informal Festivities Mark Clubs' Programs During Summer

Kappa Gamma Fetes Planned

MEMBERS OF KAPPA GAMMA, cultural, noncollegiate sorority, with national headquarters at the Hotel Raleigh, are planning midsummer activities.

July 18, Beta Gamma Chapter, of Baltimore, will entertain with a garden party at the home of Miss Margaret Duncan, at which national officers and those of the sorority chapters in Washington will be guests.

July 25, Mrs. Lila Cramer will be hostess at a tea at her home for members of Gamma Chapter, of which she is president, and for officers of the other chapters located here.

Another event of interest will be the cruise July 31 aboard the City of Washington, in which members of the Baltimore and Washington organizations will join. The summer program of the sorority is designed to promote acquaintance and friendship between members in the neighboring cities.

Last Sunday officers of Beta Gamma Chapter, of Baltimore, were guests at an informal tea given by Mrs. Helen McChesney, national director, and Miss Mercedes Galbraith, national secretary, at headquarters here, for pledges of the new Delta Chapter, of Washington, which is soon to be instituted. There was a musical program by Mrs. Gertrude Kelly.

Assisting the hostesses were Miss Florence Mermes and Miss Betty Scott, of the national staff; Miss Mary Malone Moore and Miss Kate Hulsey, of Gamma Chapter; Miss Helen Hoffman and Miss Mary Swortwout, of Beta Chapter, and Miss Marie Puhr

"Madame Chairman" . . .

By Suzanne.

SOUTHERN WOMEN, whose tradition for generations has been one of charm and graciousness, rather than of aggressiveness and independence, have retained their charm but branched out in their field of activity in recent years. Have you ever stopped, for instance, to consider how many of the women holding important Government posts in Washington are of Southern birth—positions which until very recently men considered exclusively theirs?

Just for fun, let's name a few of the able and attractive women of the South in high official places. There is Mrs. Ellen S. Woodward, of Mississippi, assistant director of the WPA, in charge of women's work. Mrs. Ruth Bryan Owen Rohde, former United States Minister to Denmark, lived in Florida at the time of her appointment; Gov. Nellie Tayloe Ross, director of the Mint, was born in Missouri (which is certainly Southwest, if not considered altogether "South").

Mrs. Blair Banister, sister of Senator Carter Glass, of Virginia, is Assistant United States Treasurer; Judge Lucy S. Howorth, of Mississippi, and Judge Laura S. Brown, of Missouri, are on the Board of Veterans' Appeals; Miss Stella Aiken, of Georgia, and Miss Helen Carlos, of Mississippi, special assistants to the Attorney General.

Judge Ellen K. Raedy should almost qualify as a Southerner, being a resident of the District of Columbia, and she, of course, is municipal judge of the District, having been appointed last February.

THEN THERE IS Miss Mae Helm, a Kentuckian who was the first woman ever to receive appointment as assistant corporation counsel of the District of Columbia and the first woman from her State to be admitted to the bar of the United States Supreme Court.

Mrs. Lucille Foster McMillin, civil service commissioner, is a native of Tennessee and Miss Earlene White, postmaster of the Senate postoffice, is a native of Mississippi. Another Southern woman in an important official position is Miss Sue White, senior attorney on the Social Security Board, who is a native of Tennessee. And, not to overlook elective offices there is Senator Hattie Caraway, of Arkansas.

This doesn't mean, incidentally, that there are not women from the Northern States holding down important posts. It is just by way of proving that those from the South have plenty of other accomplishments besides their social graces.

The House of Representatives gives ample testimony that up North the women too are considered capable officeholders. Rrepresentatives Caroline O'Day, of New York; Virginia Jenckes, of Indiana; Mary T. Norton, of New Jersey; Edith Nourse Rogers, of Massachusetts, and Nan Honeyman, of Oregon, all hail from north of the Mason-Dixon line.

DON'T USUALLY talk about "home folks," but I'm making an exception today to have a little note about Mrs. Dollie Shepperson, of Alexandria. (You may not know it, but she's been Alexandria correspondent for The Washington Post for nearly 32 years.) Anyway, yesterday afternoon she addressed the first Fidac tea given by the American Legion Auxiliary of Quantico. As department treasurer of the auxiliary for the State of Virginia, she discussed the purposes of Fidac in her talk before the Quantico group.

The meeting was held in Dumfries, one of the oldest towns in Virginia. Mrs. Shepperson has a particular interest in the Quantico auxiliary, for it is only a few years old and not very large, and she helped it get under way when it was first organized.

Carnival of Women's City Group Set for Tomorrow.

Style Show Is Feature of Event to Be Given in Alley.

"SALLY OF OUR ALLEY" is to be the theme song for the Cotton Carnival of the Women's City Club tomorrow night. It is scheduled to be given in the alley behind the clubhouse, 736 Jackson place, but, should rain interfere, the committee has everything ready to move properties and people into the clubhouse.

Mrs. Harvey W. Wiley, president, with Mr. Frank A. Birgfeld, will open the style show which is to be presented at 9 o'clock with a cake walk, while Miss Thelma Hardy of the Washington Opera Guild sings "Sally of Our Alley." Mrs. Gladys B. Middlemiss is chairman of the style show committee. Cotton frocks will be shown by the Misses Betty Thompson, Phyllis E. Stewart, Arline Purcell, Marjorie Gunnels, Loretta Barnes, Mrs. Nadine Lane Gallagher, Mrs. Harry M. Packard and Mrs. Julia Hopkins Benton.

After the style parade there will be dancing and later a floor show including a succession of brief numbers: Miss Hannah Sheehan in an Irish reel; Miss Stella Engelsen, in a fencing bout with Marton Garvey; Miss Phyllis Fisher, who will sing; Miss Janet Coon, whistler; Miss Virginia Barry and Walter Doe, in a tango. Mrs. Marie Moore Forrest is in charge of the floor show.

Refreshments, which are in charge of Mrs. Edgar T. Brown, will include hot weather delicacies. Miss Nell V. Price will be in charge of the vendors, who will wear colorful costumes. Inside the clubhouse will be fortune tellers, including Mrs. Ellis Meredith, Mrs. Cora Kimberley, Miss Jessie Hoover, and Miss Celeste Mimford, of South Carolina, who is said to have gained much of her knowledge of fortune-telling from her grandfather, who was a chief of the Wyandotte Indian Tribe.

Mrs. William Pouch To Give Radio Talk

Mrs. William H. Pouch, national president of the Children of the American Revolution, who was here a short time ago on business at national headquarters, is scheduled to broadcast July 18 at 5:30 p. m. over station WNYC, New York City, N. Y., concerning the organization's work.

The broadcast is one of a series on "The Return of the Founders," arranged by Mrs. Myrtle M. Lewis, of the American Historical Society. Mrs. Pouch's topic will be, "Children of 1776-1937."

The National Society of New England Women will have the program July 25 at 5:30, and will be represented by Mrs. Parlan Semple, jr., president-general and Mrs. Frederick Starr Pendleton, honorary president-general. They will speak on "The Faith of Our Fathers."

Fogbound Freighter Aground on Coast Beach.

At Pigeon Point, Calif., 10 passengers and a crew of 50 were periled when the freighter West Mahwah crashed on the rock-torn beach, 50 miles south of San Francisco. An S O S call sent Coast Guard cutters and rescue craft scurrying to the rescue, though later advice reported "no danger" and her skipper awaited higher tides to float the vessel.

Bob Burns Says:

The other day I heard one of these poetic movie actors expounding a theory he's worked out for a happy married life. He says, "It's very simple—stop every once in a while and remember your wedding day. Instead of looking at your wife the way she is today, close your eyes and see her as you did on your wedding day."

This might work out from the man's standpoint, but there's a catch in it! There's a possible chance the wife might remember the way her husband looked on their weddin' day.

Not long ago, Uncle Hod had an argument with my Aunt Flutey. He says, "I don't know how in the world I come to marry you!" Aunt Flutey says, "Well, I'll tell you how you come to marry me—you come in a rented tuxedo and a borrowed car!"

Veteran Retires

Franklin Little, of the Collections and Loans Division, Finance Service, Veterans' Administration, retired yesterday with a 37-year record of service to his credit.

Biography: He was appointed to the Census Bureau in 1900; in 1913 he went to the Coast and Geodetic Survey in field work in different parts of the United States; in 1916 became purchasing agent with the Federal Board for Vocational Training, and in 1922 was transferred with a part of that body to the then Veterans' Bureau. He is a charter member of the Southern Society, and has held office in that organization since 1919. At present he is its financial secretary. Long a member of the Washington Chapter, Sons of the American Revolution, he serves the organization as librarian. His fellow workers presented him a token upon his leavetaking yesterday.

Two New Offices

The opening of two Social Security Board field offices—one in Norfolk, Va., and the other in Annapolis, Md., is announced by G. R. Parker, regional director, Region 4, and chief of the field service division of the board. Norman P. Foster, a native of Maryland, is appointed manager of the Annapolis office, which will serve Annapolis and the counties of Anne Arundel, Howard, Kent, Queen Anne, Caroline, Talbot and Dorchester. Horace K. Dickson, a resident of Norfolk since 1902, will head the Norfolk field office.

Foster was born in Baltimore and was educated at George Washington University and Amherst. Before his appointment to the S. S. B. staff he had served for several years as an area supervisor in the field division of the Bureau of the Census. During the last year he was in charge of the census of business manufactures in Maryland and Delaware. He was an Army captain during the World War, and has engaged in the newspaper advertising and business, retail trade, brokerage, real estate and banking businesses.

Dickson was graduated from the Norfolk Male Academy in 1910, and attended the Virginia Military Institute. He engaged, for several years, in the lumber export business in Norfolk, New York and Cincinnati. Following service in the Army during the World War, he was employed by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce in Washington. He has been in charge of field offices of the bureau in New Orleans and Norfolk. Later he was a member of the staff of the NRA. He came to the staff of the S. S. B. in June.

Trend

In that interesting pamphlet "Government Careers for College Graduates," written by Dr. Leonard D. White and published by the Civil Service Assembly of the United States and Canada, the author makes this observation:

"Large numbers of well-qualified college and university graduates are willing to take a difficult general intelligence examination leading to nonprofessional appointments in the Federal service at an entrance salary of $1,620 per annum. Undergraduate interest in this examination increased rapidly from 1934 to 1936 despite somewhat improved employment prospects elsewhere. The experience of the Institute of Public Affairs in selecting its internes confirms an unparalleled interest on the part of college and university students in the public service. In my judgment, this is not a temporary and passing interest."

Dr. White gives credit: In compiling material for the pamphlet, he was assisted by his research secretary, Miss Jean Schneider, Ray Lyman Wilbur, jr., now of Public Administration Service, and Ismar Baruch, chief of the personnel classification division, Civil Service Commission.

Parade Ends Anacostia Fete After Day of Pageantry, Contests; Over 10,000 Look on as Bathing Beauties and Babies Compete

With a gala parade that wound through the streets of historic Southeast Washington to the sound of drums and bugles, the Anacostia Inter-Community Festival came to an end last night.

Throughout the day there was pageantry which exemplified the progressive spirit of the section. There were bathing beauties and babies, and there were athletic events, in which the lithe-limbed sons of Anacostia competed.

More than 10,000 residents of Anacostia and the Southeast participated in the celebration, which began with races and ended in the pageantry of the big night parade, and the performances of local vaudevillians, who have learned their art and practiced it on the far bank of the river across the Eleventh Street Bridge.

Holiday Spirit Rules.

In the first division, first prize went to F. M. Dent, and second prize to E. J. Read.

Prizes in the second division went to Kenna Main Post of the American Legion, with second prize going to the Hillcrest Citizens Association.

In the third division, the Home Improvement Association won first prize with a commercial float, and second prize went to the Anacostia Bank. Third prize went to the Chestnut Farms Dairy.

With all the eagerness of performers in a Spanish fair across the ocean, the actors, actresses and elocutionists of the section put a historic climax on Anacostia's big day by their recitations from the platform before the Southeast's thousands.

Garbed as a lady of long ago, in the days when bewigged citizens dipped snuff and talked of war upon the mother country, Great Britain, Ann Davis, 4-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Davis, 3660 Camden street southeast, won first prize in the baby contest in the afternoon.

Ann displayed composure and poise as the contest on the Fairlawn fields neared its conclusion. She smiled at the judges, held high her parasol and nosegay.

As thousands of citizens of Southeast Washington looked on, second prize was awarded to Irving M. Page 3d, 8-month-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Irving M. Page, jr., of 1645 V street southeast.

Irving did not flinch under the ordeal of exhibition until he was kissed at the conclusion of the contest by Ann. Then he cried—but otherwise he displayed himself a worthy recruit of the Coast Guard.

Third place went to Jinette Tizard, 4-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Tizard, of 1327 S street southeast. Jinette appeared as Scarlett O'Hara, the character of "Gone With the Wind." She curtsied in a bower of flowers.

Honorable mentions in the biggest baby show in the Southeast were Maxim Elizabeth Benhoff, 3-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William H. Benhoff, who was dressed as a drum major; Jane Ann Grove, 19-month-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Grove, of 812 Alabama avenue southeast, who became so obviously bored and weary of exhibitionism that she lay down in the midst of the baby show, and Judith Jenkins, 2-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Jenkins, who came guised as a birthday cake.

Bathing Beauty Contest.

Babies had their day, and so did youth.

So, after Representative Jennings Randolph, of West Virginia, had dedicated the new Anacostia pool, a bathing beauty contest was held.

First prize went to Ruth Brown, 15, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert H. Brown, of 1526 Ridge place southeast.

Second went to Oritha Frost, 16, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. F. C. Frost, of 1318 Ridge place, and third to Jeanette Loheofer, 15, daughter of Mrs. E. F. Loheofer, of 1904 Fourteenth street southeast.

Athletic events throughout the forenoon formed a prelude of strength and co-ordination beneath the sun for Anacostia's biggest day.

Wage Board To Scrap Old Rates for D.C.

New Minimums to Be Established for Women and Minors

First Hearing Scheduled Soon, Chairman of New Body Says.

New wage rates for women and minors will be established by the District Minimum Wage Board, it was announced last night.

Mrs. William Kittle, chairman of the recently-created board, said all rates set by the former body—now extinct 14 years—will be rescinded. In determining new rates, however, scales used by the previous board will be used as a guide, she added.

The old wage rates varied from $15 to $16.50, depending on the type of work. A recent survey by the Labor Department's women's bureau showed local concerns are paying "substantially less" than wages fixed by the old board.

The first of several scheduled hearings to determine what women and children shall be paid will be held in the near future, Mrs. Kittle announced. Although no date was set, the first industry to be heard will include mercantile groups.

Shoppers to Testify.

Employers, employes and even the shopping public will be called as witnesses.

Meanwhile, possibility of a quick ruling on the question of whether the District's long dormant minimum wage ace is retroactive to the date in 1923 when it was held invalid by the United States Supreme Court was heightened yesterday when Judge Ellen Ready, in Municipal Court, overruled an attack on the answers of employers who are fighting to have the law held operative only since its resurrection several months ago.

Two employes, one a laundress and the other a waitress, have brought suit against their employers, the Fairfax Hotel and Dick's Grill, to obtain the difference between what their wages actually were and what they should have been paid under the minimum wage act. They base their entire case on the belief the law never ceased to be in operation.

Thought Law Void.

The employers fought the suits on the basis they had paid a prevailing wage to their employes and had good reason to believe the law invalid, since the wage board had been dissolved and there was no attempt to enforce the board's acts.

The technical status of the cases now is that they probably will go on to a hearing on the merits of the question. Attorneys for both sides, Joseph C. McGarraghy, for the hotel and Irwin Bolotin and C. L. Dawson, were undecided as to their next step. Both sides plan an appeal to the United States Court of Appeals if they lose.

Should the law be held retroactive to 1923, many employers would be placed in financial jeopardy, McGarraghy asserted.

Faircloth Wins Athletic Prize At Anacostia

90-Pounder Is Called 'Outstanding Athletic Performance' in Meet.

Little 90-pound Harris Faircloth was awarded the trophy for "the outstanding athletic performance" at the Anacostia Park track and field meet yesterday on the Fairlawn Field. He was competing with a field of 60 athletes in all classes.

Placing second in the 50-yard dash and second in the standing broad jump in his class, Harris topped off his day by being anchor man on the winning 90-pound 220-yard relay team.

Harold Speith won the unlimited standing broad jump and the 100-yard dash and ran third in the 880-yard run, only to be disqualified in each event by the committee for illegal entry.

John Osteen and his brother, Billy Osteen, were both winners of their respective dash events. John won the 90-pound 50-yard dash, while Billy led the 115-pounders in the 60-yard dash.

Track Meet Results.

Airline Pilots to Continue War For Safe Field, Behncke Says

David L. Behncke, president of the Airline Pilots Association, which last week threatened to boycott the Washington Airport, last night reaffirmed the determination of his organization to hold to its demand for a safe landing field here for high-speed planes.

Behncke was to meet Fred Fagg, director of the Bureau of Air Commerce, at 10 a. m. today for his first conference since the announcement of the pilots.

Behncke said there was no doubt in his mind the action taken by the pilots would "materially decrease" passenger traffic at the air terminal.

"While I cannot say that any of them have refrained from using the airlines because they are aware of the unsafe condition of the airport, I believe that traffic will decrease now that the pilots have stated that they no longer will assume the responsibility for bringing planes into the present field."

Behncke stated negotiations are in progress to permit the fliers to use Bolling Field temporarily.

Members of the Airport Commission yesterday expressed the opinion options held by the Government on 90 per cent of the land for the proposed Camp Springs airport would lapse before Congress acted.

Senator King, chairman of the Airport Commission, is taking steps to hasten preparation of a bill to provide for the purchase of the Camp Springs site. After a conference with Representative Nichols, commission secretary, Senator King said he would call the commission together this week, to start drafting the bill, and would attempt to secure its immediate introduction.

Pointing out that the commission has no power to renew options, Senator King said that unless prompt action is forthcoming, the Government may be compelled to go to the trouble and expense of acquiring the land at Camp Springs by condemnation.

While the controversy continues recent traffic records of the Washington Airport show increases in business. A new monthly high in the number of passengers transported to or from Washington by American Airlines, Inc., was reported yesterday by Herbert D. Ford, district manager. He said American carried 1,851 passengers to or from the city last month, a 16 per cent increase over May's 1,594 passengers. The June total also is a 77 per cent increase over the 1,041 passengers carried in June, 1936.

Air express originating here also has shown a substantial gain, Ford pointed out. In June, 1937, there were 3,833 pounds carried, as compared with 3,594 pounds in May, and 1,620 in June last year. This was an increase of 137 per cent for the year.

The portrait, which is 5 feet wide and 7 feet in height, will hang for several months in the exhibition gallery of the library.

In addition to painting, he was deeply interested in literature, especially in Shakespeare.

Page went about making the picture in peculiarly scientific fashion. He made a special trip to Kesselstadt, Germany, to study the so-called death mask of the poet. The immediate result of the drawings and casts he produced was a life-size bronze bust of Shakespeare, which was purchased by the White Friars of London and presented to Stratford-on-Avon

Later, after he had compared the drawings of the death mask with all known representations of the dramatist, he worked for years on an ideal portrait, and then produced his final effort.

House District Sub-committee Would Permit Drinking at Bar

A special sub-committee of the House District Committee yesterday approved a bill to legalize drinking liquor at bars.

The suggested amendment to the local law would allow liquor to be sold in the same way as beer and wine. At present, liquor may be drunk only at tables.

The appeal for the change in regulations was made by Charles E. Sands, of the Bartenders' Union. Sands said the "overalled workman" was unable to go to hotel tap-rooms and "get swanky service" and might sometimes want to step up to a lunch counter for a drink of liquor.

The sub-committee, headed by Represented Palmisano (Democrat), of Maryland, chairman of the full committee, also reported favorably a bill to prevent shipment of tax-free liquor into the District for personal consumption and a measure to direct appeals from A. B. C. Board rulings to the District Court instead of to the Commissioners.

It rejected three other bills aimed at amendment of the liquor law. One would have permitted hotels, night clubs and restaurants to sell liquor until 2 a. m. Sunday. Sales now stop at midnight.

The other measures would have barred the transfer of licenses and required permits of solicitors for wholesalers and manufacturers.

George W. Offutt, chairman of the A. B. C. Board, objected to the bill to bar the importation of tax-free liquor into the District on the ground that it would be difficult, if not impossible, to enforce.

Representative Shafer (Republican), of Michigan, estimated that more than $1,000,000 worth of tax-free liquor is sold in Washington by dealers in New York and other cities. The sale is directly to the consumer.

3 Missing Children Back After Hiding In Woods 3 Days

After a "disappearance" of three days and an all-day trip to the Phipps Clinic of Johns Hopkins Hospital, Eleanor, 13; Evart, jr., 10, and Richard Hoar, 8, last night were back at the home of their parents, Mr. and Mrs. Evart Hoar, of Suitland, Md.

The children returned to their home yesterday after hiding in the woods for three days. They told their parents they had run away because they did not want to be taken to Baltimore for examination.

The clinic visit was made under supervision of the Prince Georges Country Welfare Board, acting on request of the Maryland Children's Aid Socity. Miss Lydia Eicher, executive secretary of the board, said that with exception of the "disappearance," the case was routine and not unusual.

Jackson, O'Conor To Talk at Picnic

Chesapeake Beach, Md., July 13 (A).—The two men who have figured most prominently during recent days in talk of the 1938 Democratic gubernatorial nomination are scheduled to speak here tomorrow at the annual picnic of the Maryland Tobacco Growers Association.

They are Mayor Howard W. Jackson of Baltimore, only announced candidate to date, and Attorney General Herbert R. O'Conor, mentioned frequently as a possible candidate. U. S. Senator Millard E. Tydings, whose term expires this year, also accepted an invitation to speak.

Mental Test Ordered For Bear, Cat Hunter

Cedric Worthington, 33, of the 600 block of N street northwest, the erstwhile "Tarzan" who has been searching for bears and one-eyed and one-eared cats, was ordered held for observation, in Police Court yesterday.

Judge Edward M. Curran directed the charge of drunkenness on which he was arrested Monday night, be held in abeyance pending result of the mental examination.

Ambassador Theater Safe Looted of $900

Safe crackers, who have taken nearly $3,000 in recent robberies, were blamed yesterday for a $900 theft at the Ambassador Theater early yesterday.

The thieves entered the theater through a side door, which they forced open, and went to the office of the manager, where the safe is located. They knocked off the combination and took the day's receipts.

Palace Laundry's Tax Cut.

The Board of Tax Appeals reduced to $4,777 yesterday a $5,156 deficiency in 1932 income taxes assessed by the Bureau of Internal Revenue on the Palace Laundry Dry Cleaning Co., of Washington. The board affirmed a $3,974 deficiency assessment on the company's 1933 income taxes.

Comedian Must Guard His Gag With His Life

By Jack Haley.
By the United Press.

Hollywood, July 13.—Friends, I give you the Haley gag bag, a little item of inestimable value, indispensible to any self-respecting comic. Now gags are the most sacred objects in a comedian's possession. On tour the wife's jewels, the family annuities, the pet Peke, even the family parrot, may be left behind without harm. But gags are precious—they must be guarded and never forgotten.

I found that train conductors are notoriously treacherous in their treatment of unchaperoned gags. And so I have devised a unique gadget to carry gags safely. Formerly I left my gags in the baggage car, but the baggage men neglected them because they were getting more baksheesh from the gossip columists.

Ritz Brothers Give a "lift."

A year ago, for example, lost two respectable gags in the neighborhood of Provo, Utah, which, of course, doesn't prove a thing. Probably they were too decrepit to make their way alone in Hollywood. And inasmuch as the Ritz brothers passed through Provo, shortly thereafter, I daresay that they gave my gags a lift.

So, while I was working in "Danger, Love at Work," I devised a foolproof bag to carry gags, the little objects of my affection and income, from pillar to post and back to Twentieth Century-Fox again. I hit upon the idea of a wicker portmanteau, that could be easily hidden under a Pullman seat.

The gag-bag works as follows: There is a small opening at the top where the gags can be fed. It is desirable to keep a small wad of damp cotton at the top of the bags, inasmuch as gags have difficulty bearing up, except in a rank atmosphere.

Allen and Benny Are Threats.

The "Haley gag bag" has a spacious layout, with a thick floor of hay, for some of the weaker gags. At the moment I'm building an apartment into the east wing of the gag-bag to hold Fred Allen. Mrs. Haley and I occupied a neighboring flat until recently, when there began to be some talk bruited about concerning a romance between one of our young gags and one of Fred Allen's and Portland Hoffa's. But that is hollow prattle, for the Allen's "gaga" is a little stale for our boy "Gago," who still, to cull a phrase, has the youthful down of chestnuts on his cheek.

Some owners of the "Haley gag bag" will—as the case may be—desire to hang their gags out of reach in a convenient tree, where Arthur Treacher can't get at them. But for the most part, it is better to leave gag bags of my 1937 vintage in a cool and respectable place, one in which the lint does not gather overmuch, and in which there is no danger of contamination from Jack Benny.

Destroyer Rescues 43 U. S. Citizens From Santander

The commander of the destroyer U. S. S. Kane, which is now at Santander, Spain, has reported the following 43 Americans, besides several persons of other nationalities, have been taken aboard for evacuation to St. Jean de Luz, France:

Lieut. Wallace Gets Army Flying Cross

First Lieut. James H. Wallace, U. S. Army Air Corps, has received the Distinguished Flying Cross for heroism and clear-headedness in an emergency. Lieut. Wallace, who is the son of Mr. and Mrs. James K. Wallace, of 1822 Monroe street northeast, received the decoration in ceremonies held yesterday at Hamilton Field, Calif.

In 1935 Lieut. Wallace made a forced landing in a jungle in Panama, after one motor of his bimotored amphibian shattered in the air and three passengers of the plane jumped to safety. The citation accompanying the award commended Lieut. Wallace's "courage and coolness" which resulted "in saving the lives of the passengers and preventing a crash landing."

Smoky Mountain Stamp Is Chosen for Souvenir

By the Associated Press.

Postmaster General Farley selected the 10-cent Smoky Mountain postage stamp of the national park series yesterday as the motif of a souvenir sheet to be issued in connection with the forty-third convention of the Society of Philatelic Americans at Asheville, N. C., August 26-28.

The convention sheet will be approximately 3 inches square, green, and bear the inscription, "in compliment to the forty-third annual convention of the Society of Philatelic Americans."

Nelson B. Bell About The Showshops

Marlene Dietrich and Robert Donat Are Costars of Hilton Story, With British Cast in Support; a Tribute to a Genius From a Friend; Dolly Dawn Joins Letter-Writers; A Few Notes of the Theater.

WHEN Marlene Dietrich and Robert Donat are seen on the screen at Loew's Capitol Theater, for the week beginning Friday, in Alexander Korda's picturization for London Films of James Hilton's novel of "Knight Without Armor," the public will be privileged to view a tempestuous, but reminiscent, romance that dates back to, and entirely concerns, Russia's disastrous part in the Great War and the ensuing Red and White revolutions that followed.

BELL.

In her adaptation of the Hilton story, Frances Marion has evolved a film play of hardship, firing squads, vandalism, Siberia, and wanton bloodshed that still manages to keep the thread of the love affair between the Countess Alexandra and the young Englishman, played by Robert Donat—who is in turn newspaper correspondent, translator and finally a member of the British Secret Service—unbroken. While much of the action is repetitive, there is a rising tide of suspense in the last few reels that causes the monotony of the earlier sequences to be largely forgotten.

The cast is composed of able actors, few of whom are known to American audiences. The revolutionary scenes and the handling of unruly mobs of refugees at the railroad stations are accomplished with Korda's fine skill and the photography is eloquent in its depiction of the chaos and terror that attended the overthrow of the old order in Russia.

Yesterday afternoon's preview audience of drama desks and film executives showed no signs or restlessness while "Knight Without Armor" was being unwound. A more comprehensive review of this thundering subject will appear here on Saturday morning, following the Capitol opening.

It is a pleasure to add the name of Dolly Dawn, featured on the stage bill at the Capitol this week, to the short list of artistes who take the trouble to write "thank you" notes to reviewers who accord them favorable notices. I hereby acknowledge with deep appreciation Miss Dawn's cordial letter which arrived at the desk yesterday to relieve the depression of a particularly hot and humid day. Miss Dawn, incidentally, is the hit of the bill with her mezzo.

Another letter comes to hand under date of July 12, which is its own ample justification and which strikes so close to the hearts of all lovers of the best in modern music at just this time that it seems fitting to reproduce it in full, to wit:

"Dear Nelson: The passing of George Gershwin seems not only the loss of a personal friend, but a Washington loss as well, for it was here that his first musical show, 'La, La, Lucille,' opened in 1919, and 'Our Nell' (sometimes known as 'Hayseed') later ushered Gershwin's unique jazz style into Poli's in 1922.

"Of course the fine thing about George was his great spirit and his lasting admiration of Jerome Kern. Gershwin never changed. I was privileged to know him before and after he became famous and success never altered him. I was with him and Brian Hooker and the late Bill Daley (who collaborated with him on the 'Our Nell' score) when 'Our Nell' premiered here. Luncheons, dinners, rehearsals, etc. (I was on The Post at the time trying to be a dramatic critic). For the review, two men covered the piece: I followed the book and lyrics and John Klenner (now one of our leading orchestration experts in New York) went along to judge the music. The review was a joint effort, which pleased Gershwin very much.

"But he never tired of talking about Kern; admitted that from Kern he had learned so much about writing, chiefly for the stage, that he felt deeply in his debt.

"At that time, the beginnings of 'Rhapsody in Blue' were stirring in his mind. He knew he would compose the number; realized, as well, that he would follow in Kern's footsteps and later write such things as 'Tip Toes' and all the other flippantly lovely shows that provided the layman with the thing he so lacks—ingratiating rhythm.

"In the years that followed, I saw him on a number of occasions in New York. He was always a big boy, gay, eager, talkative, friendly.

"Until he began to have his brother Ira write his lyrics, he liked to work best, I believe, with Brian Hooker. And Hooker, a Yale professor turned Broadway verse-maker, often said, between pipe-puffs, 'that George is a genius,' therein uttering a prophecy that the Gershwin public later found to be true.

"To hear Gershwin play accompaniments was a delight. He never played his own numbers the way he composed them. Little touches of alluring improvisation, added harmonies, figurations in counterpoint—these were discerned in his piano manner, especially at rehearsals.

"I was personally pleased a few years ago when the late Mrs. Katie Wilson Greene brought Paul Whiteman here and 'Rhapsody in Blue' was heard for the first time in Washington. Earle Dorsey asked me to prepare the program notes. It was my only attempt in the field of Philip Hale.

"When Gershwin played here with Leo Reisman's Orchetra at Constitution Hall, the late Harry Askin managed him. On that occasion I saw him for a few minutes, just before he stepped before his audience. He was smiling, friendly, paid a nice compliment to Mabel Van Dyke, who was there, and in a flash was gone—out to play brilliantly and with the ease that characterized his every action at the piano.

"Askin is dead.

"George Gershwin is dead.

"But while George Gershwin lived he poured into the design for living a spontaneity, tempo that only a rare and sensitive man could do. That feat, properly appraised, is an achievement—possibly greatness, who knows? Sincerely, (Signed) FRANK BAER."

Certainly nothing needs to be added to so fine a tribute to a genius from a friend.

Today at 1 "Elephant Boy," first of the first-run pictures with which the Rialto Theater is to inaugurate its new policy on Sunday, is to be privately screened for the boys and girls of the local press in the projection room of the Twentieth Century-Fox Film Exchange. They tell me I am going to like it, what with the direction of Robert Flaherty, the acting of the little Indian lad, Sabu, and the pachyderms. I'll let you know later.

State Dental Services Proposed by Dentists

Atlantic City, N. J., July 13 (AP).—Creation of dental service sections in the health departments of every State, under strict supervision of licensed dentists, was urged in a report by the American Dental Association's committee on public health today.

The plan, submitted at the association's seventy-ninth annual convention, was regarded in some quarters as a means by which the dentists might bring adequate dental service to the 70 per cent of the population which does not now receive it.

Life Insurance Records 8.9% Gain in Half-Year

New York, July 13 (AP).—The Association of Life Insurance Presidents, in its monthly report today to the Department of Commerce, said new life insurance written in the first six months of 1937 showed an 8.9 per cent increase over the first half of 1936. The total was $4,762,225,000, against $4,373,287,000 for the first half of 1936.

Pan American Women Honor Dr. Kneeland

Miss K. Courtney, London, England; Mrs. John Davidson, Toronto; Mrs. E. W. Hamber, wife of the lieutenant governor of British Columbia, and Mrs. George Black, member of Parliament for the Yukon territory.

Dr. Hildegarde Kneeland, Washington, D. C., was named chairman of the labor standards and standards of living program section.

Mouse Bites Snake—That's News on Coast

San Francisco, July 13 (U.P.).—Oscar, a baby boa constrictor, was persuaded to come out of hiding today after a mouse, which he was supposed to have killed and eaten, bit him and drove him into a hole in the wall. From now on Oscar will be fed dead mice.

In the Sequel to 'All Quiet'

In Hollywood

With JIMMY FIDLER

Hollywood, July 13.—Mutterings: I wish stars who tell how happily married they are today would wait until day after tomorrow to get a divorce. Frantic urge: To feed Martha Raye a green persimmon. Growl: Why can't Simone Simon forget that phoney French accent off the screen? When is some smart producer going to wake up and give Lee Tracey a decent role? Height of something or other: Marlene Dietrich's evening stroll in Beverley Hills, accompanied by her daughter, her secretary, her maid, a bodyguard and three police dogs!

SIMONE SIMON.

Hit-and-run notion: To ask Connie Bennett how it feels to have sister Joan top her on the screen. Diabolical thought: Someone should give a dinner party for Gloria Swanson, her current boy friend and her former husbands. Nervous itch: to plant a thumb tack on Ned Sparks' chair; bet he would lose that frozen expression. Secret ambition: To see a picture in which the heroine awakes without makeup. Wonder if Joan Crawford ever quits emoting?

Suggestions to theater owners: Why not search everyone for paper bags, peanut brittle and other noise-making devices before they get inside? Imaginable hilarious evening: Listing all the people in Hollywood who are related by marriage. Wish I knew why all the glamour girls tell interviewers they read biographies . . . and expect to be believed. Wondering Muse: What does Mrs. Star think when she sees Mr. Star's love scenes?

Lunched in the Brown Derby today and observed one of those things that happen only in Hollywood. Gus Kahn, the famous song writer, was sitting alone in the booth opposite mine, scribbling furiously and apparently lost to his surroundings. Suddenly he "came to" and summoned the headwaiter. After a hurried consultation, he thrust a bill into that worthy's hand, gathered up the table cover and strode out with it tucked under his arm. The head waiter soothed my curiosity by explaining that Kahn had written his latest ode to love on the table cloth.

The perfect spot for a Hollywood murder mystery is the mile-long stretch of Hollywood boulevard immediately west of the brilliantly lighted business district. There, in times past, lived Norma Talmadge, Betty Compson, Rudy Valentino and many other famous stars. It is still a swank section, but on a moonless night it is darker than a tomb, for there is only one 50-watt light to each block. At Yuletime, each one of the phoney Christmas trees in the business district is lighted by ten times as many bulbs as serve the entire length of the "black belt" to the west.

At Universal they always make it a point to show visitors the dressing room where Lon Chaney learned his makeup tricks and they tell you how proud Hollywood was of that great star. But no one ever tells you that for three years Lon walked to and from the studio because he couldn't afford a car, or that he quit Universal at the end of that time because they wouldn't raise his salary from $65 to $75 a week.

Clark Gable is a guy after my own heart. Not only is he enjoying life today, but he is planning just how to enjoy it for years to come. Each year producers find it more difficult to beat down his demands for long vacations, and next year, he told me today, they're going to find it impossible. He is planning a round trip on the China Clipper and a big game hunt in South Africa. In 1939, he wants to make a globe-girdling tour, with stopoffs in the South Seas, India and Europe.

"I have no ambition to be a millionaire," he said. "I'd be satisfied with half of the money I'm making now—if I can spend it on trips like those before I'm too old to get the most out of them."

Mental Cruelty May Be Grounds Of Moody Divorce

Reno, Nev., July 13 (AP).—Mrs. Helen Wills Moody's attorney, Robert M. Price, said today mental cruelty probably will be charged "when and if" the former first lady of tennis files suit to divorce her husband, Frederick Moody, jr., San Francisco broker.

Mrs. Moody arrived earlier this week at Lake Tahoe, but said she would make "no direct statement" concerning her plans. The former Helen Wills admitted through Price, however, she intended to seek a divorce. She was married to Moody in 1929.

When Mrs. Moody arrived at the Tahoe resort, she said she was there "merely to rest."

Norman Thomas Enters Race for N. Y. Mayor

New York, July 13 (AP).—Norman Thomas was named Socialist nominee for Mayor of New York today by the Socialist Central Committee, with the proviso that his name might be withdrawn if developments in the campaign led to indorsement of F. H. LaGuardia for re-election.

The committee declared in a resolution it would attempt to make its selections identical to those of the American Labor Party.

Garbage Collectors Strike Threatened Over Wood Case

According to James Kimbroe, business agent of Local No. 466, Hod Carriers' Union, the strike is going to be called next week unless action is taken on recent charges against W. R. Wood, superintendent of garbage collections.

Kimbroe said local authorities were attempting to "whitewash" charges that Wood practiced "inhuman treatment and favoritism" toward his workers. The Hod Carriers' Union embraces Washington's garbage collectors.

The whole thing, it developed, rests on recommendations to the Commissioners from Assistant Corporation Counsel Stanley DeNeale.

'December-May' Love Blamed in Death Pact

Cassopolis, Mich., July 13 (AP).—A note indicating doubt over the success of a "December and May" romance had caused them to decide to end their lives was found today with the bodies of Dean Slipper, 30, and Mrs. Mary Clutter, 64. The bodies were in a parked automobile. The coroner returned a verdict of murder and suicide by Slipper.

The note, written in red ink and signed by Slipper, told of the affection between the two and then concluded: "But some people think our age is way off and this is the only way out."

Contract Bridge

By Mrs. Ely Culbertson.

Dub or Expert?

Some of the most difficult questions in bridge are psychological rather than technical. An opponent makes a play, let us say, and you have to decide what prompted him to do such a thing. Has he just played like a dub—or is that merely the impression he wants to convey?

An example of such a situation arose in a recent team match. Declarer played for a "reaction" by East; but, when he got it, he didn't know what to do make of it.

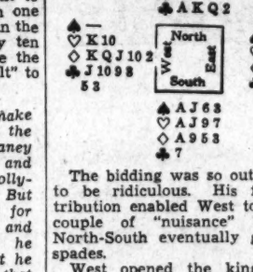
Neither side vulnerable.



The bidding was so outlandish as to be ridiculous. His freak distribution enabled West to put in a couple of "nuisance" bids, but North-South eventually got to six spades.

West opened the king of diamonds, and South studied the hand a moment before playing a card. The contract obviously depended on losing no more than one trick in the major suits. A successful heart finesse would make the hand very simple, but South had to consider whether or not to take the spade finesse in the event that the heart king was held by West. Normally, a player should finesse for a king when missing three cards in the suit. But South saw a way in which he might get a "reaction" from East. South therefore discarded a heart dummy on the opening lead, and won in his own hand with the ace of diamonds. He crossed to the dummy by means of a club, and continued that suit for three rounds. He did not need a discard but hoped that East would betray his trump holding either by a foolish play or by indecision on the second or third round of clubs.

East had a pretty good idea what South was after and was perfectly willing to string along. On the third round of clubs East casually played the nine of spades. South overruffed and now had to guess whether East really had no interest in the trump suit and therefore lacked the king of spades and wanted to convey the impression that the trump suit was of no interest to him.

After having worked so hard to trap East into making a mistake, South had succeeded only in presenting himself with a bigger problem than he started with. After much staring at the ceiling and scratching of his head he decided to play West for the blank king of spades. Needless to say, this lost the slam since South could not then avoid the loss of a spade and a heart.

Ex-Wife of Prince Is Wed by Secretary

Zurich, Switzerland, July 15 (AP). The former Lois Booth, of Ottawa, whose marriage to Prince Erik of Denmark was dissolved by King Christian early this year, was believed to be on a honeymoon in Germany today with her second husband.

The former princess, 39, was married yesterday to her erstwhile secretary, Thorkild Juelsbuerg, 34, son of the Copenhagen postoffice director. Mrs. Juelsbuerg was married to Prince Erik, a cousin of King Christian, in Ottawa in 1924. They had two children, Countess Alexandra Rosenborg and Count Christian Rosenborg.

Griff Reads Riot Act to Harris; Hill Sent to Macks on Waivers

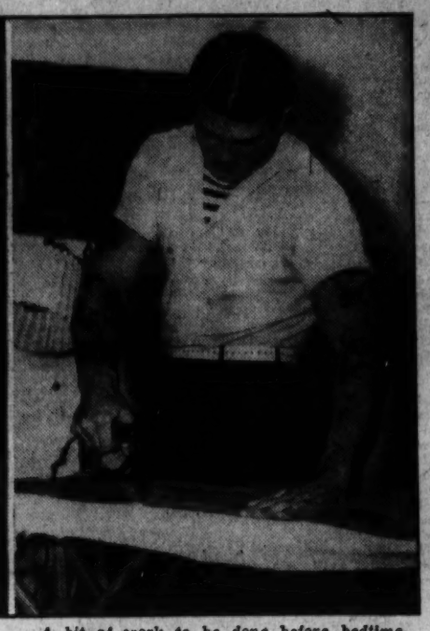
Charles (Hobo) Williams starts his day in training for Middleweight Champion Freddie Steele with a shave. "I don't see why all this training," insists the Hobo, who will meet Steele at Griffith Stadium next Tuesday night. "A shave is all I need to lick guys like this sissie champion."

"Well, if it must be done, it must be done, I guess." So Williams builds up his big biceps with a bit of wood chopping. Wood chopping is right in character for the 20-year-old contender, who for years lived outdoors and did such things as this for a living.

Working out with sparring partners is some fun to the Hobo, who was born to box. Here we see him landing a terrific right on the chin of Baby Face Untz, welterweight champion of the Marine Corps. It is the same sparmate who was floored in newsreel shots.

The light bag is not so much fun—it can't hit back. This form of training, however, does strengthen shoulder and arm muscles, keeping a fighter from becoming arm-weary and tired in the heat of battle. At least two rounds of this are scheduled every day.



A bit of work to be done before bedtime. Even if a guy is a hobo, that's no reason why his pants shouldn't be pressed. After the workout with the iron, Williams will retire, to awake bright and early the next morning. Wotta life!

Griffith Ired by Lack Of Fight Nats Show

By Shirley Povich.
A Staff Correspondent.

En Route to Cleveland, July 13.—A riot act which Owner Clark Griffith read today in the little stucco office at Griffith Stadium will have its second reading tomorrow when Manager Bucky Harris assembles the Nats in their dressing room at Cleveland.

The silver-haired president of the Washington Club was hopping mad as he called Harris into conference before the team departed for its Western tour. "I want more fight on this ball club," he snorted.

"I'm telling you and I want you to tell the team," Griffith continued. "There isn't enough hustle out there on the field. Some of those fellows have been playing like they're on a pension. Well, they're not. I'm paying 'em good salaries and I want some good baseball."

Later in the day when he talked with newspapermen, Griffith was still irate.

"When is the last time we came from behind to win a ball game? I can't remember. That shows they haven't been hustling out there. I won't care if they lose as long as they put up a battle. If they don't show some pep, there's going to be a lot of changes on the club."

Griffith intimated that he would call in his minor league prospects quickly if the team did not come back from the West with better reports. He intimated that young Jimmy Wasdell, Chatanooga first baseman, and Bobby Estallella, the little Cuban outfielder now with Charlotte, would be among the first to be called.

Wasdell has been battering the fences at Chattanooga and Estallela has been a sensation at Charlotte where he has compiled a batting average of .404 and has hit 18 home runs. Half of Estallella's hits have been for extra bases.

"He's improved in the outfield, too," said Griffith. "All he needs is a little confidence in himself and he'll hit 'em out of the big league parks too. Down in that Southern League, those pitchers were throwing the ball at his head and calling him names and it got him down. But that's a notorious bean-ball league. He'll do better up here."

Griffith absolved Manager Harris from all blame in the Nats' failure to win. Harris agreed heartily that some of his ball players had been showing all the competitive spirit of a wet dishrag.

"But they'll be told tomorrow in Cleveland," Harris said. "I'm having a meeting in the locker room before the game and the law will be laid down. The first guy who doesn't give 100 per cent is out of the line-up, and I don't care who it may be.

Outfielder Al Simmons accompanied the team as it entrained tonight for Cleveland for a four-game series with the fifth-place Indians, who hold a 3½ game margin over the Nats. Simmons took a final batting practice at Griffith Stadium today and reported that the sponge attached to the handle of his bat greatly reduced the pain of his broken left hand.

Chapman Fined $50, Suspended by Harridge

Chicago, July 13 (AP).—Ben Chapman, Boston outfielder, was fined $50 and suspended for three days by William Harridge, president of the American League, today for threatening to take a punch at Umpire John Quinn at Philadelphia Sunday.

Chapman, angered when Quinn called him out on an attempted delayed steal, threw a ball from the outfield a few minutes later, apparently aiming at Quinn. When Quinn ordered him out of the game, Chapman rushed him, but teammates restrained him from striking a blow.

Time Out! By Chet Smith

Hill Goes to Macks

A's Claim Hill; Nats Left With 4 Outfielders

Utility Player Had Batted Only .217 This Season With Washington.

Outfielder Jess Hill and the Washington Ball Club parted company yesterday when Clark Griffith announced that Hill had been sold to the Philadelphia Athletics for the waiver price of $7,500.

Two other American League clubs claimed the fleet outfielder on waivers, according to Griffith, but the Athletics, by reason of the fact that they are in last place in the league, had first choice.

Hill had been a virtual nonentity with the Washington club this season, batting only .217 in the 33 games in which he figured, mostly as a pinch hitter or pinch runner. Recognized as one of the fastest men in baseball, he added little to the club's batting attack.

Hill joined the Washington Club in the winter of 1935-36 in the Washington-New York trade that brought him to the Nats along with Pitcher Jimmy DeShong in exchange for Pitcher Irving Hadley and Outfielder Roy Johnson. He batted .305 with the Nats last season but failed to earn a regular outfield post.

The Yankees brought Hill into the majors from Newark with which team he had signed following a spectacular athletic career at the University of California where he won the national collegiate broad-jump title and was a halfback on the Trojan team which beat Pittsburgh in the Rose Bowl, 47-14.

He was hailed as a certain regular with the Nats at the start of last season but forfeited his regular outfield post when he went hitless in the Nats' first three games. This year he was relegated to reserve duty.

At Philadelphia, Hill is expected to play regularly. With Outfielders Roy Johnson and George Rothrock nursing leg injuries, the A's have been short-handed in the outfield, pressing Pitcher Nelson into service for outfield duty in recent games.

The release of Hill reduces to four the number of outfielders now with the Nats and leaves Manager Harris with an under-manned department, particularly with Al Simmons' broken hand not yet fully healed. Griffith is expected to announce the acquisition of another outfielder, possibly Taft Wright, of Chattanooga, within the next few days.

District Boxing Body Backs Max Schmeling

Proposing to be "neither dead nor impotent," the District Boxing Commission yesterday, in letters to the manager of Bob Tow and to Edward Foster, secretary of the National Boxing Association, sustained the recent Brecsia decision, assailed "monopoly" of boxing as practiced by Mike Jacobs and Madison Square Garden, upheld the public interest and the public welfare, defended the integrity of commissions in general and of the District solons in particular, urged that Max Schmeling be declared the logical contender for Joe Louis' title and urged that four other champions and Louis show "willingness within 30 days of defending their titles or face the chance of having them declared vacant."

It was a bold, brave piece of work. If the local group should have its way, Mike Jacobs would have to submit contracts with Louis and Jim Braddock within ten days. The Garden would have to turn over its contract with Schmeling. If they exist, the local solons will declare them null and void.

Declaring that "while million-dollar gates are desirable, it is more desirable that titles shall pass to those most superior in their respective classes, and in this sense the public interest would be protected," the District group put its unqualified stamp of approval on Der Schlager and ordered Barney Ross, Lou Ambers, Petey Sarron and Sixto Escobar to "show willingness to compete for the title against a logical contender chosen by the national body."

Just what prompted the three-page billet-doux to the national body the letter did not venture to explain except to say: "Mr. Jacobs, on one hand, and Madison Square, on the other, have it within their power to regulate and determine not only the holding of titles, but the regulation of boxing throughout the world, and commissions should cease their function. Either that or that commissions should relegate their functioning and duties to that of providing for referees and other officials incident to the staging of contests, but having nothing to do otherwise with the regulation of boxing. Better that commissions should be dead than impotent. This commission proposes to be neither!"

The letter recommends that the national body enforce the rule that every titleholder shall defend his title at least once in six months, and every six months.

The letter "invited the attention" of the national body to "the wide disparity of weights at present and heretofore existing between the welterweight and middleweight divisions," and recommended the establishment of a 155-pound class and a 185 pound class.

In its letter to Robert May, manager of Bob Tow, the Alexandria heavyweight who lost a close decision to Jorge Brescia, of Argentina here recently, the commission patted both boys on the back at the same time but firmly upheld the decision. The commission expressed a "very high regard for Tow as a boxer and as a man." "On the other hand," the letter went on to say, "Brescia, who is also a young, clean and aspiring pugilist with no doubt the same worthy ambitions that Tow has, was a foreign visitor in our midst." So, Brescia is still the victor.

The letter said that "the commission has adopted as a general policy the backing up of its officials. It may remove the officials later for cause, but it will not reverse their decisions. The commission would be glad to approve of a return match.

The boxing solons magnanimously closed their letter by writing: "The commission would be glad to approve of a return match between Tow and Brescia and that such a contest would draw a large gate."

Natie Brown Wins.

Double Plays Help Indians Down Sox, 2-1

Make Four as Galehouse Limits Opposition to Seven Hits.

Chicago, July 13 (AP).—Cleveland's Indians backed up Dennis Galehouse's seven-hit pitching with four doubleplays and just enough hitting today to defeat the Chicago White Sox, 2 to 1, in the only game played in the series.

Fewer than 3,000 spectators saw the Sox stage a ninth-inning rally that fell a run shy of a tie when Luke Sewell hit into the Indian's fourth doubleplay. The Sox turned in three double killings.

Cotton Defeats Shute, 6-5 for $2,500 Purse

By Scotty Reston.

Walton Heath, England, July 13 (A.P.).—Tall Henry Cotton, lowering like the villain in a heavy melodrama, defeated Denny Shute, United States P. G. A. titleholder, 6 and 5, today in perhaps the gloomiest 72-hole golf match in history.

Playing superbly before an unruly crowd of 10,000, some of whom cycled or rode horseback along the edge of the course, Cotton, the newly crowned British Open champion, struck an uncanny putting streak in the latter stages of the two-day tussle, to outclass the American.

The victory carried with it the "world match-play championship" and $2,000 for Cotton. Shute picked up $500, enough to pay his boat fare home on the Berengaria tomorrow.

Two up at the end of the first by holes yesterday, and 5 up after today's morning round, the sweet-swinging Briton, who is supposed to be a mediocre player on the greens, actually won the match with four magnificent putts during the last round.

The first of these came on the seventh hole—the sixty-first of the match.

Denny had won the fifty-ninth with a 3 and the sixtieth with a deuce, to reduce Cotton's lead to three holes. At the sixty-first, Shute was right at the cup for another birdie when Cotton knocked in a 12-footer for a half to save himself from losing three holes in a row.

Two holes later, the dour Briton canned a 45-footer for a birdie to go four up in turning for the last nine. Fifteen-footers for birdies at the 65th and 66th completed the conquest for they made Cotton dormie six and enabled him to close out the match with a half on the next hole.

Cotton was 11 under par for the two days of play. This pace, Shute said at the end, was "just too good for me." The American himself was three under for the route though par for the course admittedly was not difficult.

"Hilarious Henry" didn't even smile when Shute hit his drive to the 64th green into a woman's skirt. The ball stayed there. Cotton surveyed the situation solemnly, but Shute, four down at the time, laughed and joked with the woman until referee Jim Braid came along and decided Denny didn't have to play it from there.

But though Cotton's dourness caused the crowd to cheer loudly Denny's one brief rally, there was no denying Great Britain's incomparable player. He was monotonously straight and unbelievably long with all his shots. He outdrove Shute and though he couldn't match Denny's pitches, he did outputt him today.

Cotton said after the match he had received several offers to go to the United States soon. One of these suggested a $4,000 match against Ralph Guldahl, American open champion.

Charles Town Opens 4-Day Meet Today

Full Fields Scheduled on 8-Race Program at Nearby Track.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Charles Town, W. Va., July 13.—One of the oldest race meetings in this country, which dates the sport of kings back to the colonial days, has a renewal tomorrow with the opening of the Charles Town Horse Show Association's four-day session on the grounds of the Charles Town Jockey Club. With the exception of the added attraction of a morning horse show, the program will be the same as those that marked the successful 32-day meeting which closed on July 5.

The racing will be conducted under the rules of the West Virginia Racing Commission, and the stewards will be headed by T. C. Bradley, chief official at the long session. Post time for the first race will remain at 2:30 o'clock with the race special leaving Washington at 12:30 o'clock.

The daily double will be conducted on the second and third races.

With few exceptions, the horses entered are the same as those which ran here for more than a month. Several of those showing in the entries have been to Delaware Park and have returned. The entries show an abundance of horses, with nine, one over the number of possible starters here, the smallest of the groups named.

The sixth race, the afternoon feature, is over the 4½-furlong course and has drawn a speedy field. Edith Walker, Highland Song, Irenes Bob, Chief Hollis and Prince Turley are among those that will vie for the $500 purse.

The program calls for eight races and Race Secretary Freddie Burton has made provision for the canceling of a race by naming a substitute field.

Jockeys Palumbo, Machado and Root, the big three of the regular meetings, have accepted mounts for tomorrow's racing.

Louis Starts Training.

New York, July 13 (AP).—Joe Louis, recently crowned heavyweight boxing champion, will start training at Pompton Lakes, N. J., July 26, for the first defense of his title against Tommy Farr, British Empire champion, promoter Mike Jacobs announced today. The title fight is scheduled for August 26 at the Yankee Stadium.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—CARAVAN QUEEN, $6.80, $3.70, $2.90; TZIGANE, $10.40, $4.90; VICKSON, $4.00.

CARAVAN QUEEN, placed outside starting gate, broke slow, was rushed into contending position, took lead while running easily, but was put to a drive through stretch. TZIGANE, off in middle of pack, moved up with winner, held on well, but was no match for winner. VICKSON, close all the way, was not there when put to drive. COMBATANT showed good effort. GREY SIMON closed some ground. RISE AND SHINE showed speed. KING RULER set the early pace, but tired. The rest were never prominent.

DAILY DOUBLE, FIRST AND SECOND RACES, PAID $58.40.

THIRD RACE—Five furlongs. Purse, $1,000. For 2-year-old maidens. Start good from stalls. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 4:17½. Off at 4:22. Winner, E. K. Bryson's ch. g. Two-dollar mutuels paid—POSTDATE, $43.10, $26.40, $8.60; FAIR COMPANY, $6.10, $3.40; CHARDASH, $2.60.

POSTDATE, off alertly, was rated along in front while saving ground, but had to be put to a drive. FAIR COMPANY, off slow, was rushed up to leader, made several bids, but was not good enough. CHARDASH, in trouble during early running, was going well at the end. MICRO, close all the way, could not threaten. DRESSAGE showed good speed. WAR SCARE had early foot. BIT OF ACTION was off bad and would not extend himself.

FOURTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stalls. Won easily; place same. Went to post at 4:47. Off at 4:49½. Winner, J. A. Manfuso's b. or br. f. Two-dollar mutuels paid—TREASURE SHIP, $9.70, $5.10, $3.20; FLOWER TIME, $18.30, $5.70; MISS TIPTOE, $2.50.

TREASURE SHIP, far out of it in early running, circled field, stayed on outside entering stretch and was going away at the end. FLOWER TIME, in front all the way, held on well when placed to a drive, but was not good enough for winner. MISS TIPTOE improved her position all the way, but was not there when put to a drive. PRECIOUS KING ran an even race. FLYING GYPSY had early speed, but tired. WAR CHAT showed speed.

EIGHTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stalls. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 6:45½. Off at 6:47. Winner, C. E. Millen's ch. g. (5), by Canaan—Culture. Trained by P. J. Maguire. Value to winner, $700; second, $150; third, $100; fourth, $50. Time, 1:48.

MORE PEP, off alertly, dropped out of it going to first turn, circled field on stretch turn and was going away at the end. BLACK SCOUT, hustled to front soon after break, held on well, but could not withstand winner's rush. PRINCE PETTIE forced the pace, but tired. GOODY GOODY was shuffled back and was coming again at the end. The others were never contenders.

League Sags Under Weight of Yanks

By Shirley Povich.

Col. Jacob Ruppert may perish at the thought, but with the rest of the league already in a swoon the only sure-fire means of restoring interest in the American League pennant race would be for Ruppert to dismantle his Yankee ball club—distribute some of his stars to weaker points in the league.

POVICH.

The Yankees, who won last year's pennant by 19½ games over the second club, are making a shambles of the current league race. With the season not yet half completed, Ruppert's Yanks have amassed a 5½-game lead and are taking to the West with a seven-game winning streak.

In seven American League towns, fans are being asked to support clubs already tabbed as also rans. The only thing that can stop the Yankees is a train wreck, or plagues, pestilence and locusts. The Yanks simply overpower the opposition, lose a game here and there, and make the pennant a forlorn hope for every city but New York.

And recent developments haven't helped matters. When the Yankees, virtually single-handed, whipped the National League All-Stars by a decisive 8-3 score at Griffith Stadium last week, it didn't improve the situation in the American League. The Yanks merely added emphasis to their domination of their own league and any club that takes the field against 'em is bogged down, psychologically, before the game starts.

There's a home run in almost all of those Yankee bats—DiMaggio, Gehrig, Dickey, Selkirk and Lazzeri have hit four times as many homers as the entire Washington team. By the power of the extra-base hit, the Yanks win ball games. The other day in New York was typical. Washington made three hits in one inning—all singles—and scored one run. The Yanks made on hit in the same inning—a home run that followed a base on balls and presto! They had two runs.

Even a good pitcher doesn't figure to beat the Yanks. The strain of pitching to eight hitters who can knock the ball out of the lot is too great. At some point, the pitcher must crack and when he does the Yankees win the ball game. Of course 70 per cent of the pitchers they face never had a chance to beat 'em from the start.

It is far-fetched, of course, to suppose that the Yankees can be induced to part with a portion of their stars, even in the interest of the general welfare of the league. Particularly is such a procedure unlikely as long as Col. Ruppert is owner of the Yankees.

Because Ruppert is not in baseball for profit, but as a sop to his vanity. He demands not only a winning team, but a team that dominates the league. He isn't even a baseball fan in the true sense of the word. Because, he admits that he gets more pleasure out of a 16-1 victory by the Yankees than out of a tight, close battle that carries for the lay fan the thrill of competition.

And there's no immediate evidence that the Yanks will collapse. Down in Newark, Ruppert's chief farm, there is a pitcher who has won 13 games and lost none in the International League and is ready to be called into the Yankee fold next season. The Yankees' lone weak spot—second base, where the aging legs of Tony Lazerri are creaking under the strain—can be plugged by a Newark infielder who is hitting a cool .350 and fielding as well as Lazzeri ever did.

At that, Ruppert can take a bow for his successful stewardship of the Yankees since he bought the club in 1920. Nine pennants have been won. Ruppert, who makes no bones about his ignorance of baseball, has surrounded himself with the best baseball brains the land could offer.

In Joe McCarthy he came up with a manager who maintained harmony among the Yankee stars, got their best out of them. In charge of his farm system, Ruppert installed George Weiss, admittedly one of the stand-out baseball men of the minor leagues. They have spent Ruppert's money wisely.

Tom Yawkey, of the Red Sox and Walter Briggs of the Tigers have nearly as many shekels as Ruppert and are even more willing to spend for talent, but neither of those clubs have been able to come up with the stars that Ruppert's men bought.

Money helps, though. Only the Yanks, Red Sox and Tigers could afford to pay $50,000 for Joe DiMaggio and then leave him out on the Coast for two years for seasoning. And when the Yankees finally did call DiMaggio in they were repaid a hundred fold. In this case, money begot money.

But the very care with which Ruppert built the very perfection his Yankee team has achieved may boomerang upon him unless a better balanced league is attained. At this writing, there isn't much fun in seven other cities in the league. Revolt is in the air.

Harbert, 20 Under Par, Wins Crown

Jackson, Mich., July 13 (AP).—Chick Harbert, 22-year-old Battle Creek amateur, won the Michigan open golf championship this afternoon with a 72-hole score of 268, beating par by 20 strokes. His only over-par round was his last one, on which he shot a 36, 38—74.

Not until the outgoing nine of his final round did the sensational young amateur go as high as par figures. Then he had a 36. The strain continued to tell as he slipped further to a 38 on the incoming nine.

On his morning round, he posted a 33, 34—67, bagging an eagle 3 on the eighteenth hole. Yesterday he had rounds of 31, 32—63 and 32, 32—64.

His sustained low scoring was without precedent in Michigan golfing history.

Three Teams Share Low Gross Tie

Post 77's in Mixed Two-Ball Events at Congressional.

A three-way tie for low gross existed in the Maryland State Golf Association's mixed two-ball event at Congressional yesterday, District Champion Bobby Brownell and blonde Marion Brown posting gross 77s to tie with Jack Lynch and Mrs. K. S. Giles, of Indian Spring, and Mrs. Betty Meckley, Indian Spring, and Maury Fitzgerald.

A 7 handicap enabled Mrs. Giles and Lynch to take low net honors with Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Lacey, of Manor, who shot 90—20—70. Brown-Brownell and Meckley-Fitzgerald divided the gross awards.

Sixty teams competed in the event, marred by a shower that caught a majority of the contestants on the final nine and sent the scores several strokes higher.

Brownell and Miss Brown, District mixed two-ball champions, paired nines of 39 and 38, while Fitzgerald and Mrs. Meckley posted the lowest score of the day on the second nine, a 36, and paired it with an outgoing 41. Mrs. Giles and Lynch were only 1 stroke over par on the long first nine, a 37, and returned in 40.

Three teams tied for 71 nets, a stroke out of the prize-winning circle, including Billy Dettweiler and Barbara Simons, Elizabeth Bonthron and Johnny Farrell, and Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Mihills.

Jim Karcher Signs With Local Eleven

Jim Karcher, 22-year-old guard and one of the youngest regulars on any big league pro football team, today was signed by the Redskins for the 1937 season.

Karcher, whose home is in Forest, Ohio, starred at Ohio State for three years and last season became a fixture in the line-up of the Redskins after he had attracted Nation-wide recognition in the College All-Star-Pro games in Chicago. The latest addition to the 1937 Washington roster is 6 feet tall and weighs 210 pounds. In addition to performing his guard duties, he is a good place-kicker.

Karcher will report here for training on August 25, when Coach Ray Flaherty inaugurates a three-week siege of preparation for the opening game September 17 with the New York Giants in Griffith Stadium.

Nat Owner May Sell Chattanooga Tomorrow

Clarke Griffith, owner of the Nats, will make an attempt to dispose of the Washington Club's Chattanooga franchise in the Southern Association tomorrow when he attends a meeting of Chattanooga sportsmen who plan to buy the team.

Griffith's offer to sell the franchise, plant and all players not under option from the Nats, for $150,000, was met by a counter proposal which the Nats' owner will investigate on his trip to Chattanooga. Local interests there would purchase the club and install Joe Engel, Washington scout, as its president.

Stars Will Compete.

A Ripping Victory, Mr. Rippy!

Rippy Leads Publinks Field as Four Qualify

By Merrell W. Whittlesey.

Claude Rippy, a grim and weary defending public links champion, broke into a victory smile on the final hole at East Potomac yesterday as a curling 6-foot putt found the cup for a birdie three and his third consecutive city municipal championship, with a 72-hole total of 284, four strokes under the par of 288.

A stroke behind and an onlooker to the putt that sealed his hopes was chubby Andrew Oliveri, who nevertheless assured himself of a trip to the national championship in San Francisco, August 9 to 14, with a 285 gross score.

The third and fourth members of Washington's Harding Cup team who are not yet assured of a trip to the Coast, are Bobby Burton, a Navy Yard machinist, who went to the second round of the nationals last year, and Jim Gipe, who played the last hole in three under par for the day, an eagle in the morning and much-needed birdie in the afternoon Burton's total was 286 and Gipe's 297.

Hart An Alternate.

Jerry Hart, the transplanted Arkansan, trailed Gipe by a stroke with 298 and gained an alternate's post, a stroke ahead of Harold Bowers, a Lorton Reformatory guard, and Harry Saunders, local horseshoe luminary, who tied at 299.

Entering the final day's play knotted at 141 totals, Oliveri again played the downtown public links layout in sub-par figures and went to lunch with a three-stroke lead over Rippy who required 73 shots on his third trip around the course.

In the afternoon play, Rippy lost little time in gaining a tie, playing the first four holes in one under par while Andy slipped two over. At the end of 63 holes Rippy was in a familiar position, with a one-stroke lead and a fine approach shot on the sixty-fourth boosted it to two strokes and eight holes remaining.

The par 5 eleventh hole cost Rippy six strokes as he wasted two in a sand trap and Oliveri tied the count with a birdie four, chipping dead from over the green.

Halve Next Three.

They halved the next three holes in even four's, regulation figures, but at this point the challenger missed a crucial 4-foot putt, the shot that put him behind and cost him at least a tie for the title. They both missed par on the sixteenth, or seventieth hole, and each parred the semifinal.

The last hole, a short par 4, found the pace-setters drives on the edge of the carpet and Oliveri, playing a fine approach shot, stopped 2½ feet from the cup and the gallery sensed a tie and playoff.

Rippy stepped to his shot and played a low pitch and run that went directly over the cup but 6 feet past. Grabbing his putter he waited little time in lining up the shot and calmly rapped it in to make it three straight for the local public links crown. He smiled and grabbed Andy's hand as he sealed the latter's final chance for the title.

Miss Leigus Eliminated In Tourney

Upset by Shirley Combs in Playground Department Play, 7-5, 7-5.

Anna Leigus, sturdy Georgetown Playground girl who played the "giant-killer" role herself several days ago in the girls' singles tournament conducted by the Department of Playgrounds, yesterday was upset by petite Shirley Combs of Happy Hollow, 7—5, 7—5, in the day's outstanding match.

Miss Leigus conquered Eileen Lennon of Montrose on Monday in a surprising upset, but yesterday was not equal to the steady, well-placed strokes Miss Combs displayed. Betty Jacobs of Montrose, that playground's leading contender since Miss Lennon's elimination, also moved into the third round by defeating Emma Dorr of Hearst, 6—4, 6—1. Both matches were played at Chevy Chase.

At Takoma Park, Hazel (Jimmy) Bishopp, a semifinalist last year and a heavy favorite in the current tourney, continued her superb play by walloping Winnie Lake of Twin Oaks in straight sets, 6—0, 6—0. Irma Williard, also of Takoma, eliminated another Twin Oaks representative, Margaret Gray, 6—4, 7—5.

Wheat Climbs 7½c a Bushel In Boiling Pit

Canada's Exportable Surplus Is Reported a Complete Loss.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, July 13.—In feverish trading the Chicago wheat market late today kited up 7½ cents a bushel maximum, and at the last held 5 to 6 cents net gain.

One of the principal incentives for the excited buying which accompanied today's sensational rise of prices was belief expressed in various quarters that America's chief competitor, Canada, is practically facing a complete loss of her exportable wheat surplus. Estimates were current that because of widespread drought and excessively high temperatures the 1937 Canadian wheat crop has already been reduced to as low as 125,000,000 bushels, an amount approximately but a third of normal.

At the close Chicago wheat futures were 5 to 6 cents above yesterday's finish, July $1.25⅞@1.26, September $1.26¼, December $1.28½. Corn unchanged to 2⅛ higher, July $1.28¼, September $1.13¾@1.14, December 82¾@82⅞; oats ⅝@2 cents up, September 38¼@38⅝, and rye showing 4⅜@5 cents bulge, September 89⅝. Provisions results varied from 10 cents setback to an equal advance.

Perry and Elgin Join D.C.Exchange

Governors of the Washington Stock Exchange yesterday elected J. Carl Perry and James C. Elgin to membership on the exchange.

J. C. PERRY.

The two new members are partners in the brokerage firm of W. B. Hibbs & Co., having been connected with the concern, which holds membership in the New York Stock Exchange and other exchanges, for more than 20 years.

They take the seats on the Washington exchange which had been held by the estate of the late W. B. Hibbs, founder of the firm bearing his name, and Karl W. Corby, who had been a partner in the firm for many years and was an official of the local exchange and president of the District Bankers' Association at the time of his death about six months ago. After the death of Mr. Corby, Mr. Perry and Mr. Elgin were admitted to partnership in W. B. Hibbs & Co.

The action of the board of governors gives W. B. Hibbs & Co. five representatives on the exchange. The other seats are held by W. W. Spaid, who was elected vice president of the exchange to succeed Mr. Corby; J. Thilman Hendrick and Paul P. Rodler, partners in the firm.

J. C. ELGIN.

Exchange membership is now larger than it has been for some time. Several additions last year gave the roster a substantial boost in active members.

B. & O. Carloadings.

Baltimore, Md., July 13.—Carloadings on the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad for the week ended July 10 totaled 42,968, comprising 27,504 cars loaded on line and 15,464 received from connections. For the same week last year total loads were 48,264.

298,000,000 Barrels of Oil Now in Storage

Compres With 311,046,000 Barrels at End of June Last Year.

By the Associated Press.

Santa Fe, N. Mex., July 13.—A great pool of 298,000,000 barrels of refinable oil was in storage in the United States at the end of March, the United States Bureau of Mines reported to representatives of the interstate oil compact today.

Of this, 93,000,000 barrels was classified as "old" stock stored prior to January 1, 1936, said Dr. R. A. Cattel , of the Federal bureau. The report constituted the first official Federal survey of the Nation's oil stocks above ground.

W. R. Boyd, jr., of Texas, executive vice president of the American Petroleum Institute, forecast opposition in Congress to ratification of the compact renewal. He said the "oil jobbers" of the Nation would charge the compact was a "gigantic" conspiracy on the part of oil producing States to "milk" the consuming public.

The total amount of crude petroleum shown as the result of the survey was compared in the report with 337,254,000 barrels as of December 31, 1934, the date of the bureau's first report, and 314,885,000 on December 31, 1935, 311,046,000 on June 30, 1936, and 288,184,000 barrels on December 31, 1936.

Distribution of storage stocks, according to State of origin includes (figures in barrels) Illinois, 9,692,000; Indiana, 47,000; Kentucky, 946,000; Louisiana, 11,881,000; Michigan, 1,114,000; New York, 374,000; Ohio, 911,000; Pennsylvania, 2,259,000; West Virginia, 1,732,000; foreign, 1,952,000.

Daily Output Declines.

Tulsa, Okla., July 13 (AP).—Production of crude oil in the United States declined 9,947 barrels daily during the week ending July 10, to an average of 3,529,608 barrels daily, the Oil and Gas Journal reported today.

Oklahoma had a decrease of 900 to 618,500 barrels daily, east Texas was up 2,785 to 474,800, and all of Texas registered a decline of 19,543 for an average of 1,418,679.

The Market

Stocks Turn Irregular After Steel Reaches New High; Wheat Jumps Limit.

New York, July 13.—On sales volume which failed to reach a million shares the stock market was worn a little ragged around the price edges. Sentiment in general nevertheless continued bullish in the thin ranks of hardened Wall Street traders. Foreign exchange brought another advance in French francs, on the eve of the French national holiday, and a sharp rise in Dutch currency.

Speculative excitement was greater in wheat than it was in stocks. Most commodity markets, including cotton, were steady. Bonds were a shade more active and the high grades held their position. Wheat futures at the leading trading centers soared to the day's limit of 5 cents a bushel, either because of drought reports or rumors of too much rain, which is another way of describing the black rust menace. It always seems to be too much or too little on the farms and in the markets. December wheat closed in Chicago 5 cents higher at $1.28½ cents a bushel.

Higher wheat and other grain prices gave some aid to stock divisions directly related to farm products. Farm implements and mail orders were well liked, and in the late trading some more attention was given to Western railroad shares. Wheat prices are going up less because of any shortage in the crop in this country than because of rising demand, much of it from abroad. Grain haulage will be large this summer and autumn and the effect will be magical on the small towns and rural population of the West.

Profit-Taking Light.

Since the industrial market from the low point of June 17 to the best prices of yesterday had recovered approximately 10 per cent, the irregularity of prices today surprised few persons. Profit-taking was light in most groups and losses were fractional. Trading volume eased with the selling. Opening prices were irregularly higher, and the first deals brought a jump in Steel, but the stock couldn't hold. Bethlehem and Republic acted in a similar fashion.

Rails most of the day had less power of resistance to selling than the industrials displayed. Oils were firm to only fractionally lower at their worst. Phillies found a good demand, as did Texas. Motors receded. Chrysler gave up 2 points. Metal shares, electrical equipments and rubbers softened. Packing house stocks were bought with relish, although Morrell broke 4 points under disappointment at dividend suspension late yesterday.

Political scenery is shifting so rapidly at Washington that financial developments which ordinarily would cause much discussion are now attracting little attention. The fight on the court packing bill, the attempt to rush through the legislation giving the Government power to set minimum hours and wages for industry, and the myriad of other New Deal measures are confusing, but probably are not putting down or lifting stock market prices just now. Second quarter profits reports and the current trade statistics, now that the strike menace has diminished, probably are greater influences.

Chinese Silver.

The recent announcement of the Treasury on the swap of gold for Chinese silver is interesting if only because it is somewhat puzzling. One Wall Street economist who has looked into the published reports of the matter says he cannot see how the Treaseury is to sell gold from the inactive gold fund without repurchasing the gold from China—and presumably putting it back into the inactive fund with a further addition to the public debt—unless the gold is to be actually exported to China, which the Treasury officials said was not to be the case.

China normally uses dollar balances, not gold, and the Treasury could provide dollars in exchange for the silver purchased. In that case the Treasury would reimburse its dollar balances by deposit of silver certificates in the reserve banks. Such an operation would leave the gold fund untouched. The silver certificate would swell bank reserves, which is contrary to the theory under which the sterilization of gold was undertaken. There are many apparently incomprehensible angles to the scheme which apparently was evolved to satisfy the Treasury's legal conscience in regard to the impossible obligations put upon it by the silver purchase act and which are further than ever from fulfillment.

Assuming the silver is being purchased at present market price of around 45 cents, China is getting a good deal, for the sale of any large amount of silver in the open market, without the Treasury's support, would crush the market price of the white metal. It can only be hoped we will recoup on sales of goods to China.

First to Report.

National Biscuit was the first large industrial company to show second quarter earnings, and they were slightly under the profits for a year ago. Half a dozen or more other companies, including Union Oil and United Fruit, also have reported. The trend they have established makes it look as though, in spite of higher costs and strikes in many industries, the level of profits in second quarter rose a little above that of the corresponding period of last year.

Bank Rate.

London financial commentators noted that on July 1 the Bank of England's discount rate completed five years of rule at 2 per cent. That was the longest spell of the cheapest money the London market ever had seen. The previous record was that of the nineties, when a 2 per cent rate lasted for a little over two and a half years. On this side we have had even cheaper money, measured by bank rate, but the period has been shorter than that for the London market. The Federal Reserve Bank of New York has maintained a 1½ per cent discount rate since February 2, 1934, and the likelihood of its changing is remote.

Bonnet Francs o' Glide.

The London financial press already has dubbed the unpegged and free-swinging French currency the Bonnet franc, as successor to the short-lived Auriol franc, the names coming from the Ministers of Finance. "Reading from left to right," suggests the Financial News, the next in line of succession will be "the Caallaux franc and—horror—the Doriot franc. Apparently the Bonnet franc will be the freest of all the francs since the days of 600 francs to the pound." To keep the jingle moving, it may be added that the Bonnet franc will not only be free but easy as well; or, to use the Scottish expression: the Bonnet francs o' glide.

No Labor Group Can Usurp Rule, Rand Declares

Remington-Rand President Sees No Interruption to Expanding Business.

By the Associated Press.

New York, July 13.—James H. Rand, jr., chairman of the board and president of Remington Rand, Inc., said today he has "firm conviction that business in the United States is going steadily ahead, perhaps more rapidly than most people expect."

Addressing the annual meeting of stockholders in the office equipment company, Rand held "a majority of working people in the United States are firm believers in democratic government and are opposed to centralization of authority along lines witnessed in Europe."

"The great bulk of workers," he said, "place the welfare of the country ahead of their own aggrandizement and favor majority rule over minority rule. As long as this is true there will be no usurpation of power by John L. Lewis and the C. I. O. or any other minority group. There's going to be no serious interruption of business improvement and employment in this country." He added 90 per cent of strikes are called by a radical minority and cannot succeed.

"They may succeed for a time," he declared, "if they are helped by politicians, but they cannot succeed permanently. The American working man will not be dominated by racketeers."

Rand disclosed that sales for June of his own company were the largest for the month since 1929, totaling $4,070,000, against $3,212,000 for the same month last year. For the three months ended with June, he reported, preliminary figures showed sales of $12,619,000, against $10,022,000 in the comparable period last year.

Dr. Boggs Dies In Jerusalem; D. C. Educator

Dr. Boggs left Washington in 1934 to travel in Europe and in Western Asia. In January, 1935, she underwent an operation in a Bethlehem hospital and since then had been unable to travel.

Born in Philadelphia, Dr. Boggs was educated at Bryn Mawr and at the University of Pennsylvania, where she was awarded her master's degree in 1911.

Two years later she founded the Bureau of Commercial Economics here She was director of the bureau, a philanthropic institution designed to promote international understanding, from 1922 until she was forced to retire because of poor health.

A cosmopolitan figure who had traveled and lived in many countries, Dr. Boggs had worked as educational adviser to the Japanese and South African governments. For her service toward the cause of international education, she was decorated by the Czechoslovakian government with the Order of the White Lion.

Dr. Boggs was a former president of the League of American Pen Women and was an honorary member of the Medical Academy of Science and of the Cleveland Photographic Society. She was a fellow of the Royal Geographic Society.

Robert C. Milliken, Capital Guide, Dies

Robert C. Milliken, 76, former member of the Capitol guide force, died yesterday in Gallinger Hospital after a long illness.

A native of Texas, he had lived in Washington before the World War. He was a recognized expert on the farm mortgage bank system and at one time was special representative for a large insurance company here.

He went to Gallinger Hospital in May after suffering a hip fracture in a fall. A brother in Texas is his only near relative, friends said.

Dr. J. W. Churchman, Noted Surgeon, Dies

New York, July 13 (AP).—Dr. John Woolman Churchman, 60, surgeon and bacteriologist noted for his study of the antiseptic value of aniline dyes, died yesterday at his home here.

Through his work in applying scientifically the methods of the dye industry to the treatment of disease, Dr. Churchman blazed new trails in the conquest of peritonitis, suppurating joints, infected wounds and pyorrhea.

Detroit Paper 6% Pfd. Stock Offered Today

The Detroit Paper Products Corporation is offering today the unsold portion of 25,000 shares of $25 par value 6 per cent cumulative convertible preferred stock, through Russell Maguire & Co., Inc., and Weed, Hall, Berndt & Co., as principal underwriters, at $25 per share.

Common stockholders of record June 25 have the prior right to subscribe to the preferred shares at $25 per share, for 11 days following the effective date of the registration statement at the rate of not less than one share of preferred for each 8.4 shares of common stock. The new 6 per cent preferred stock is convertible at the option of the holder into three shares of the company's common stock prior to July 1, 1942, and thereafter into 2½ shares of common until June 30, 1947.

Of the proceeds from the sale of this stock, $115,000 less $5,500 already paid by the company will be used by the company, together with 30,000 shares of its $1 par common stock, to acquire a paper mill, which, it is estimated, will be capable when rehabilitated of producing 100 tons of high-grade paperboard per day.

Sumners Asks Abandonment Of Court Plan

As the House roared its ovation, only Majority Leader Sam Rayburn, Minority Leader Snell and some half a dozen Democrats were not standing, clapping and cheering. His face red, his head bowed most of the time, Rayburn sat silent.

Another standing ovation resounded when he said it would be "better under all circumstances to cease attempting to press through what I believe is an unnecessary piece of legislation."

Attired in a cream-colored linen suit, clinching his sentences with hand-slapping and thrusts of his fist, Summers made no effort at high oratory. His words and his appearance were those one would expect from a country lawyer making his case before a rural court.

Chamber Quiets.

Members strained to listen, and as the speech proceeded, pages were barred from running in the aisle, and Speaker Bankhead rapped for order. After that you could hear a pin drop. In the galleries sat Senator Tom Connally, of Texas, who expects to make the next speech for the opposition in the Senate.

Sumners spoke for an hour, and for half of that time he was uninterrupted. He said he was addressing himself to a "grave" situation, one that required the solidarity of a "united" people. He said he was "for the President," and when the court fight is behind, the President will say the House and the Judiciary committee have "been as good friends of his as the folks who gave him that other bill."

Cites Cost of New Deal.

He said the President had done "a good job" but a costly job, with expenditures that are now "moving us toward bankruptcy of self-reliance and independence." And looking at the "job ahead," he said it would not be "good, old-fashioned horse sense to split us from top to bottom and then attempt to tackle a job that only a united people have got a chance to do." He said he was trying to prevent that "split" when he counseled abandonment of the court plan.

Sumners said direct "pressure" was unnecessary in correcting the court situation, that "we must give Nature—Nature—God Almighty—a chance." Then he detailed the manner in which he said the judiciary committee and the House had "exercised in a quiet, respectful way its pressure upon the court to get it out of the field where Government policy is fixed." He said "without hollering its head off" the Judiciary Committee has been trying to "ease" the justices out.

Retirement Provided.

As a first step, he pointed out, it made it possible for justices to retire at full pay, and one retirement already had resulted from that step. When it was found acts of Congress were being "too easily set aside," he said, the House took a further step—passed a bill giving the Attorney General the right to intervene in private lower court litigation, when questions of constitutionality were involved. He asked that this legislation be given a "chance" to secure results.

The Texan drew laughter as he enlivened his speech with occasional anecdotes or congratulated "you boys" in the House for "keeping your feet on the ground."

Once he was interrupted by Rules Chairman John J. O'Connor, who asked how the court bill could come to the House if the Sumners group did not report it. Sumners suggested: "There is the Rules Committee." But O'Connor assured him the Rules group usually acted only on requests of standing committees.

May File Petition.

Sumners said that "any time this House wants to assume the responsibility of taking the bill away from the committee (by petition), it has the privilege of doing so."

Representatives Gerald J. Boileau (Progressive), of Wisconsin, and Byron B. Harlan (Democrat), of Ohio, were on their feet with suggesions a petition discharging the committee be started immediately.

"In other words," said Harlan, explaining the rules, "the bill was filed in the House on July 6. It will have to pend before the gentleman's committee for 30 days, and it will take 3 or 4 days to get the necessary number of signatures to the petition."

"The gentleman cannot do it in that time," smiled Sumners.

Representative Charles J. Colden (Democrat), of California, interrupted to ask if Sumners was advocating a Congressional "sit-down" strike against the court bill.

"I believe they would do pretty good to sit down on this issue and go to work on other issues which demand attention," replied Sumners. "In all respect to the gentleman, I say that I do not think this is the only question in this country on which I know and you know it is splitting."

At one point, Representative Martin J. Kennedy (Democrat), of New York, pointed out that former Justice Van Devanter's successor on the Supreme bench had not been named by the President, although the vacancy has been pending a month. Sumners declined to comment on that.

Over in the Senate, Copeland and Bailey were dousing the compromise court bill with fountains of hot oil, and Senator Bennett Champ Clark, of Missouri, opposition parliamentarian, was getting the Senate tangled in its rules.

Bombarding the chair with parliamentary inquiries, Clark tried to call up the farm land bank interest bill vetoed by the President, but President Pro Tem Key Pittman ruled such action would take Copeland off his feet.

Recess Finally Won.

As Senators are allowed only two speeches on each question under "filibuster" rulings, Copeland refused to yield even to Assistant Floor Leader Barkley for a motion to recess. He acquiesced finally only on the unanimous assent of the Senate that he be given the floor today.

Meanwhile, Clark accused Pittman of "illogical" rulings, and said refusal to give the vetoed measure right of way was contrary to provisions of the Constitution itself.

Copeland assailed the drafting of New Deal legislation, including the court bill, by "juvenile mentalities" and the "boys" of the Administration. He said he would have been amazed if the court had not struck many of them down, because they were "sloppily written."

Copeland declared Democrats are now wondering whether they are still members of "the dominant party." Actually, he said, this is referred to as a New Deal Administration, not a Democratic one, and outstanding party members in Congress are rarely consulted. "Just what is our place?" he asked.

Then he criticized the Administration's espousal of La Guardia's candidacy for the New York mayoralty—called it "an unholy alliance with the Republicans of New York City to elect the man who is now the nominee of the Communists for mayor."

"In the actions of the Administration in the New York campaign there is full exculpation for what we on this side of the aisle may do with the court-packing scheme," he said.

"We stand here, devoted to the cause of democracy. We have not changed. Those who have taken possession of our organization are the men who have changed."

Admonishing that "disaster" lies ahead for the Democratic Party, Copeland said "it isn't too late now" to save it. He said he appealed to "my good friend, to my neighbor, to Mr. Fellow New Yorker, Franklin Delano Roosevelt," to "drop the court proposal."

He said he was urging "that he shall not press too heavily upon the patience, the good-will and the readiness to serve of a very considerable group in this body who are Democrats in every sense of the word."

Bailey, in renewing his attack, mingled warnings of "dictatorship" with political satire, Biblical quotations and a final injunction to the President: "We know that our cause is a holy cause. You are dealing with devoted men."

The North Carolinian charged Senate court bill opponents "are threatened with defeat by Administration leaders" and "pressure is being brought to bear upon the representatives of the people by men armed with patronage and funds"

But Bailey said there was "a remedy for threatened Senators—the threat of reprisals invites measures of self-defense" He suggested Congress still has control of appropriations and the Senate has the power to confirm appointments—"the House has the power to impeach, and the Senate, to try."

"We have control of the judicial branch of Government," said the Senator "We can exalt it or bring it low. It cannot defend itself. It has neither purse nor sword. We have the purse and the President has the sword. It is great to have a giant's power, but it is tyrannous to use it as a giant."

Senator Sherman Minton, of Indiana, dared Bailey to "name any Senators who have been threatened" by the Administration. Bailey said he could, but he did not want to bring the debate "down to the level of personalities."

Bailey said he told North Carolinians in the last campaign he had no fear of the President becoming a "dictator."

"Now let me go back to my home city of Raleigh and make that speech," he said.

All shots missed their mark.

Rep. Sumners' Address Against Court Bill

Excerpted text of speech on the Supreme Court issue by Representative Hatton A. Sumners, of Texas, chairman of the House Judiciary Committee:

Mr. Speaker, I am going to try this afternoon to be useful in a situation which I regard, which you regard, and which the Nation regards as very serious.

When we stop to take our soundings, when we look at the stars for our direction, when we read the signs of the times, no American citizen can fail to appreciate the gravity of our situation. It does not make any difference what your views may be about other matters, no intelligent American citizen can fail to appreciate the seriousness of the situation. When we look about us at the nations of the earth today and when we make an examination of our own selves, we know that free government or popular government on earth, relatively speaking, is disappearing. For anybody with our governmental traditions to face that situation and know that the very identical things which are afflicting the other nations are also afflicting this Nation, he must be serious.

We know that we are at the crossroads in America. Soon we must determine whether or not we are going to preserve Anglo-Saxon institutions in this country or join other nations of the earth under a dictator. Do not let anybody fool himself about that. People do not have dictators merely because they choose to have dictators. They have dictators when their problems exceed the governmental capacity of their people.

Germany lost the power to govern and Hitler came to govern when the people of Germany failed to provide in themselves an agency through which the government of Germany could be carried on and meet its problems.

We think these things cannot come to us. We are deceived by a perfectly ridiculous egotism. Only the greatest people who ever trod this earth can save this country from a dictator.

I am going to talk a little about the Supreme Court situation, and I shall try to do it in a very helpful way. I want to talk just as plainly as I can, and, as God knows my heart, I want to do good for my country. I am for the President of the United States I am for my country. I don't want to discuss this pending bill. I want to direct your attention to the havoc which that bill is now working in the solidarity of the Nation and that is what I am talking about. That is all that I am talking about.

I don't know whether Mr. Wilson misunderstood his commission, his trusteeship or not, but when that interesting time came, when under the influence of the same Anglo-Saxon sentiment, when the time came when that governmental power should have been sent back into the Anglo-Saxon institutions, he did not recognize it. He was not well. I pray God that same thing may not happen . . .

The committee on judiciary of the House has tried to keep this thing out of the House, and I have no apology to make for it.

Over in the Senate they have just a little crowd, relatively. They know each other pretty well; it is a sort of club, and when one of those fellows says something mean about another and the other says, 'You are another one,' probably knowing each other so well there is not much fussing about it, and they just say, 'Come on, and let's go to lunch.'

But once you bring that issue into this house and sift it, top to bottom, then I say to my distinguished friend, the leader of the House, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. Rayburn) and to my distinguished friend, the Speaker, and split this body on this issue—when you do that, then I say, don't try to tell me that this House will be in any shape to do the job of saving this country.

I am appealing to the thinking sense of grown men and women who have their heads on their own shoulders.

Then we need to sit down and give this thing a little thinking, and when we give it a little thinking, get a picture of the world and see what is happening at the other end of the Hill, see what would happen here, looking at the condition of this country and the job ahead of us, we then ask ourselves if it is good, old-fashioned horse sense to split us from top to bottom and then attempt to tackle a job that only a united people have got a chance to do.

I want to tell you that it is a pretty ticklish job when you begin to hit over the head indiscriminately people who operate the functioning machinery of your system of government

Now, sometimes you have to do it, but it is a pretty ticklish job, it is a pretty dangerous job in times like these, because the average man does not draw a distinction between that intangible thing that we love with a holy love called patriotism and the human beings who are operating its functioning machinery.

When you destroy the confidence of the people in the persons who are operating that machine it is just one step beyond that until you have destroyed their confidence in their government.

Beginning with Marshall, the Supreme Court has been moving further and a little further into the field where governmental policy is fixed. Your committee, without hollering its head off about it, has been trying to ease them out. We did not agree with the decision of the Supreme Court in the municipal bankruptcy act. We brought in here, as your servants, another bill through which we hoped to present again that issue to the Supreme Court; in other words, we are asking for a new hearing before that court on that issue. We indicated to them without getting into the press and hollering our heads off that we did not believe that that decision ought to stand as the law of the land, that we wanted to present it again. I have heard it being said about one of the Justices of the Supreme Court who changed his attitude and sustained the legislation of this Congress in that line of decisions recently—I have heard it talked around that he turned his coat—that he is a coat-turner.

Now do you think that sort of talk is going to help the House in trying to get this court upon a rehearing to permit the States to do what we believe they can do? Did you ever hear of a man who, upon securing a rehearing of a case that had been decided against him, when the court on the rehearing decided for him, running out of the courthouse and flaunting back to the judges: "Turncoat! Turncoat!"

I want to appeal to the Nation. I want to appeal to the officers of the Nation, to consider this one thing in view of what is happening under your program in the House, in view of what is happening by trying to put the other program through. I am appealing to them to give consideration to this concrete proposition: Would it not be better under all circumstances to cease attempting to press through what I believe is an unnecessary piece of legislation. (Applause, the members rising.)

Let us give a chance to the legislation of this House to secure results. That is not an unreasonable request. It is not an unreasonable suggestion for the reason this is not the last session of the Congress. If it were the last session of the Congress there might be some reason to continue to impair the solidarity of this Nation and put through this last bill.

This is a thing that the people are thinking about and they have very deep convictions about the matter.

Even under the present retirement act, what does it mean? It means that the court as now constituted has upheld the program recently presented. Since those decisions one of the dissenting justices has quit. This gives the opportunity to appoint somebody else. This would mean, unless they misjudge the man who is appointed, that these decisions that were rendered by a vote of 5 to 4 during the last session would have a vote of 6 to 3.

That is not all. When you examine into the situation you will find out that as soon as we get this thing out of the way, as soon as we take the lash from above the heads of these judges over there, some more of them will retire. I mean this as a fact. Everybody knows it is a fact. What is the excuse, then, for this bill being pressed any further? To save my life I cannot figure it out.

I have not tried to make a speech this afternoon, but if they force that bill into this House, when we are trying to preserve the solidarity of the Nation, if they bring that bill into this House for consideration I do not believe they will have hide enough left to be worth bothering about.

Police Thwart Elopement of Nancy Curtis

From her home in Northeast Harbor she insisted Mrs. Curtis would be home "some time this evening," but declined to disclose her whereabouts.

"She left here today in her own car, accompanied by her chauffeur," Mrs. Hoyt said. "She was going on this long drive. I hope she will arrive here soon to deny this story herself."

Mrs. Curtis, daughter of the solicitor general of the Taft Administration, first figured prominently in Washington news the year after she made her debut there in 1922. On the eve of her wedding to Lieut. F. Wiseman Clarke, of the British navy, she changed her mind and declared the ceremony "indefinitely postponed."

News of the canceled marriage, announced by Mrs. Hoyt, burst like a bombshell on society. The wedding was to have been an outstanding event of the season. Mrs. Hoyt's announcement merely stated:

"The wedding has been postponed on account of the illness of my daughter."

After the Wiseman-Clark breakup her next definite step, following at least one rumored engagement, was her marriage to Gerald A. Wynn-Wynn on September 7, 1926, at St. George's Church, London.

Divorces Briton.

Early the following year it was rumored she had left the Englishman, and this was confirmed shortly after with the report she had obtained a divorce. On November 25, 1927, she married Edward D. Curtis, of Boston.

They met in Paris, where Mrs. Wynn-Wynne had obtained her divorce and where Curtis was employed with the Paris branch of the Guaranty Trust Co. and were married in La Plata, Md., announcing the news to their families by telegram.

There was one child, a daughter born in 1929, and three years later Mrs. Curtis was divorced again, this time in Reno.

Again in 1932 Mrs. Curtis startled society and her friends by announcing a secret love for young Smith Reynolds, tobacco heir and husband of torch-singer Libby Holman, who was later killed mysteriously at Winston-Salem, N. C.

Mrs. Curtis then journeyed to London and turned to a round of social activities to "blot out"—as she put it—the memory of her love for Reynolds.

Elopements have run in the Hoyt family. Mrs. Curtis' sister was the late Elinor Wylie, famous poet and novelist and the wife of William Rose Benet. In 1904 she married Philip S. Hichborn, wealthy Washington lawyer, and several years later she ran away with Horace Wylie, husband of a friend and neighbor. Hichborn committed suicide in 1912.

Wylie and Mrs. Hichborn went to Europe and were married following the divorce of Mr. and Mrs. Wylie. Elinor Wylie in turn obtained a divorce three years later, and in 1923 married William Rose Benet. She died in 1928.

Among Mrs. Curtis' writings is a study of her sister, "Elinor Wylie—Portrait of an Unknown Lady," and several novels including "Roundabout," "Unkind Star" and "Susan Errant." She also has contributed to the New Yorker, Vogue and other magazines.

Cummings' Aide Out, Annoyed Chief

By the Associated Press.

Justice Department officials said yesterday Albert Levitt, a special assistant to Attorney General Cummings, has resigned.

Levitt recently displeased his chief by opposing before a Senate committee appointment of Lawrence W. Cramer as Governor of the Virgin Islands. Cummings told reporters he was "disgusted." Levitt served as Federal judge in the Virgin Islands for a year.

A total of 45 special attorneys are resigning or being dropped, officials said. They asserted these changes are customary.

Terry Walker, Actress, Named in Alienation Suit

Los Angeles, July 13 (AP).—Terry Walker, film actress whose real name is Alice Dahl, was charged today with alienating the affections of Jan Rubini, violinist and orchestra leader.

Seeking $50,000, the musician's wife, Adele Crane Rubini, filed suit alleging Miss Walker in 1935 began a campaign to win her husband's love and that she finally persuaded him to leave his home last June 19.

President Regards World Parley Hint As Distrust Sign

President Roosevelt, it was learned yesterday, regards the frequent reports from Europe suggesting him as sponsor of an international economic conference as due to international jealousies and distrust in each country of the leadership of other powers in that part of the world.

He feels it a natural impulse to turn to some one far removed from the scene of the discord when everyone there, from the leaders down to the man in the street, feels they are up against a stone wall.

However, the President is said to feel that Europeans, in the suggestions that he call or preside over a conference, are looking to him as something of a magician, when, as a matter of fact he has no hat with a rabbit in it.

Blonde Isabelle Hallin, the Saugus high school teacher accused of serving cocktails to her pupils at a party, lost the first skirmish in her effort to retain her job when the school board voted, 3 to 2, not to reappoint her after she refused their invitation to resign. Although a board member said the cocktail-party rumor had nothing to do with the matter, and two ministers and the American Legion Post came out in her favor as against one minister who strung along with the school board, she was ousted. Her attorney now is going to seek a writ of mandamus as the next move in her behalf.

The mammoth air-cooling system of the Department of Justice Building failed to function yesterday afternoon and Attorney General Homer S. Cummings, J. Edgar Hoover, chief of the Federal Bureau of Investigtaion, and their employes sweltered as investigators investigated. Pretty soon they found out that a fish had gotten into the machinery and they proceeded to extricate it and fix things up. Water from the Tidal Basin supplies the system which manufactures 2,000 tons of ice a day.

Dentist Uses Chemical To Find Hidden Decay

Atlantic City, N. J., July 13 (AP).—Dr. James Mark Prime of Omaha told the American Dental Association today of a newly-applied chemical he predicted would vastly reduce tooth decay in the future.

The chemical is ammoniacal silver nitrate, and when applied to the teeth it immediately turns black at the spots where the germs of decay are at work. The chemical is "a God-send" to the dentist, he said, because there will no longer be danger of cementing caps and bands over hidden, incipient cavities.
